MEETS HARD PROBLEMS

MacDonald. Likely to Apply
Brake on Conservatives on Tariff

London—(P)—The British national government was back at work today under the direction of Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, cautioning humility over the results of the election and addressing itself to the sober task of executing the "doctor's mandate" it asked and received from the people.

Backed by an unprecedented majority of more than 500, of the 615 seats of the house of commons, the prime minister began today a series of conferences with King George and with his cabinet to lay the groundwork for the rehabilitation program which is to be presented to parliament early next month.

The British press, adding its voice to that of Mr. MacDonald and Stanley Baldwin, Conservative leader, cautioned the country to remember the victory was a triumph of the national government and not of any party, in spite of the fact that the Conservatives will occupy nearly five-sixths of the seats in the new parliament.

The predominance of Conservatives led to the expectation that a demand for a full-blooded protection policy would be the first trouble encountered by MacDonald. He is pledged not to impose protection until it has been fully investigated and scientific legislation has been prepared.

Other Big Issues
Other measures which are expected to make up a principal part of the new governments program are stabilization of the pound, negotiations for a review of world war debts and correcting the British adverse trade balance.

"These enormous majorities," said the London Times, which supported the national government, this morning, "do not mean that the people voted blindly anti-Labor, or anti-free trade or anti any of the minor issues of politics. There should be no crowding, either in general or over individuals, but only sober satisfaction that the caliber of British democracy has been shown so unmistakably to the low opinion formed of it by the defeated."

Besides his conference with the king today the prime minister was to preside over the cabinet meeting which is the first of a series of meetings to be held during the next few days to draft the speech which King George will read from the throne when the new parliament is opened with full state ceremonial on Nov. 10.

The reconstruction of the cabinet will occupy much of Mr. MacDonald's time between now and then. Although the appointments are in his own hands many consultations will be necessary. The general belief is that the abbreviated emergency cabinet, formed in August, will be considerably enlarged.

There was much speculation, especially about who would succeed Philip Snowden as chancellor of the exchequer. Snowden is expected to receive a peerage and a seat in the house of lords, but it was believed he would also hold a place in the expanded cabinet.

The choice for his place at the head of the exchequer is supposed to be between Neville Chamberlain, Conservative, now minister of public health, and Walter Runciman, one of the members of Sir John Simon's group of Liberals.

Labor Lacks Leader
The scattering remnant of the Labor party which will occupy a little group of opposition benches in a corner of the parliament chamber is also faced with the task of finding a leader. It was taken for granted that a parliament seat would be Little Rock, Ark.—(P)—United States Senator Thaddeus H. Caraway of Arkansas, underwent an operation here today for removal of a kidney stone. His physicians said the operation was a success and the senator's condition was described as entirely satisfactory.

4 Children
Die In Fire
In Missouri

Independence, Mo.—(P)—Edith Fern Wight, 11, died at a hospital here today, the fourth child fatally burned in their efforts to start a cookstove fire with kerosene last night.

A discussion of "Halloween stories" previously had led the children to lock the doors of the home, delaying rescue attempts.

Other victims were: Thomas Roy Wright, 6; Kathleen Wright, 9, his sister, and Thomas Brown, 11, a neighbor boy who was visiting them.

Ellie Jane, Edith's twin sister, suffered from dangerous burns, said the fire started when Tommy Brown poured kerosene in the cook stove at the request of Edith who told him "that'll make it start easier."

She said Tommy, in his haste to be rid of the blazing can of kerosene, tossed it into a kerosene lamp which overturned adding its fuel to the flames.

FIVE DEAD, SCORE HURT
IN ARKANSAS TRAGEDY

Memphis, Tenn.—(P)—The trailer of a truck loaded with cotton pickers went into a ditch near Marion, Ark., early today carrying five persons to their deaths and injuring more than a score of others.

Occupants of the trailer, residents of Marietta and Curtisville, in Pent-tissco, Mississippi, were being moved to the Eason plantation, 35 miles north of Marion, where they were to pick cotton.

The dead: Mrs. Ollie Allen, 23; Alvie Cummings, 7; Herbert Gilmore, 18; Wiley Nichols, 23, and Wiley Nichols, Jr., three months old baby.

Cary Eason, plantation owner, was driving the truck with the trailer attached. About a mile and a half north of Marion the trailer broke loose and careened into a six foot ditch. There were 53 members in the party.

All household goods of the families was carried on the truck and trailer.

TALKS HIMSELF INTO
PORTAGE JAIL CELL

Portage—(P)—"A man named Frank Emroth is wanted in Milwaukee for getting some goods under false pretenses," said Frank Emerson to Police Chief T. F. Curry. "Strange that his name could be so much like mine."

Chief Curry thought it strange, too. After communication with Milwaukee authorities he became convinced that Emroth is Emerson. He was arrested on charge of obtaining goods valued at $32 from the Milwaukee Air Power Pump company.

WOMAN SUES HER MATE
FOR $5,000 DAMAGES

Waukesha—(P)—A jury today began deliberation of the $5,000 damage suit instituted by Mrs. Lucille Williams against her husband, Rodney, former aviation ace, whom she charges with negligence in operating his automobile. The wife alleged she was injured seriously in an automobile accident when her husband was the driver of the machine. The husband escorted his wife from the courtroom as attorneys concluded arguments yesterday.

LUTZ COMPANY
BUYS SITE FOR
NEW ICE PLANTAppleton Firm Proposes to Manufacture Ice Within Half Year

Construction of a modern ice manufacturing plant, with elimination of its cutting of natural ice from the Fox river and Lake Winnebago, is contemplated by the Lutz Ice Co., according to an announcement of company officials this morning.

The proposed plant will be constructed at the northeast corner of N. Superior and W. Franklin-sts., the site of the old Wisconsin Malt and Grain company. This property was acquired by the Lutz Ice Co. yesterday in a deal completed with the First Trust Co. The property was held by the Ramsay estate. The amount involved was not disclosed.

Several years ago the buildings of the old malt company, which had operated for many years in Appleton were wrecked and the materials were sold. The property has been idle since that time. The malt company went out of business shortly after prohibition was established.

Should the plans of the Lutz Ice company plans mature, officials said work on the new ice plant would be started within a month. It is hoped that enough progress could be made on the new building to permit work to be continued all winter. Present plans call for completion of the new structure in time to manufacture ice for distribution next summer.

Would Move Offices
The employees required by the company to operate the new plant would be approximately the same as is needed now to distribute natural ice. At the present time the company engages about 25 men. Its offices are located at 109 N. Morrison-st. Offices of the company, if the new building is constructed, will be moved to the new structure.

Discontinuing the cutting of natural ice would mean that some 50 or 60 men, who are given several weeks of employment at the task during winter months, would no longer be required. The officials said that if plans are completed for the new plant that its ice cutting activities would be curtailed this winter and only enough ice would be cut to care for the trade until the time the new plant is ready. The Lutz Ice Co. which has been in business in Appleton for 50 years, was founded by L. W. and E. B. Lutz. In 1921 the company was incorporated and the control passed into the hands of stockholders. Present officers are Orville Lutz, president and William C. Jacobson, secretary.

The property acquired by the Lutz company extends from Franklin-st. to the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad tracks at the north. It is 85 feet deep, ending on an alley. The proposed new building would be 85 feet wide and 150 feet long, with one section being two stories high and the other section one story high.

LABOR ASKS STATE
INDUSTRIAL RESERVEWants to Provide for Payment of Workers During Slump Periods

Shawano—(P)—Wisconsin labor will ask the legislature to require industries to set up reserves out of which workers may be paid during periods of depression, says Earl Smith, president of the Wisconsin Federation of Labor, told the state convention of the American Society of Equity here yesterday.

The reserve, Mr. Ohl contended, would be in no sense a dole. It would be similar, he said, to surpluses which industries accumulate to meet dividend requirements in periods of depression.

"The Wisconsin corporation has a surplus of $34,000,000, and from this sum it continued to pay dividends and salaries of executives," Mr. Ohl said. "But that same company discharged 3,000 workers. It is too much to ask for a surplus for employees to prevent children of workmen from going hungry and lightly clad when officers and stockholders of corporations are doing so well?"

Mr. Ohl made a plea for closer cooperation of farmers and laborers. Farm women, he said, should be educated to recognize labels of manufacturers fair to labor, and to patronize such manufacturers. Similarly, farm products should be so labeled that wives of factory workers may know what they are buying in groceries.

An equity member interrupted Mr. Ohl to say that wives of factory workers should refuse to buy substitutes for lard and butter, adulterated ice cream and canned milk.

Committees representing labor and the equity will meet to work out plans for closer cooperation between the groups.

Men Held On
Dry ChargesAccused of Conspiracy After Neugent Products Co. Investigation

Green Bay—(P)—Nic Feldhausen, Green Bay contractor, Fred Miller, prominent ice and coal dealer, and Matt Finnerty, soft drink parlor proprietor and alleged "beer baron," were arrested by a United States deputy marshal here today on charges of manufacturing liquor, and of conspiracy to violate the Volstead act. They were to go to Milwaukee for arraignment before the court this afternoon. Joseph P. Neugent, former president of the Neugent Products company here, of which Feldhausen and Miller were directors, also is named in the warrant, and is in custody in Milwaukee, it was reported.

The arrests followed extensive investigation of activities of the Neugent Products company, now in receivership, which manufactured near beer.

Feldhausen and Miller were directors of the Neugent Products company. They and Finnerty were arrested on bench warrants based on indictments of the federal grand jury in Milwaukee last spring. Several others were indicted, it was indicated.

Neugent recently was released from the house of correction after serving sentence for alleged evasion of income tax laws.

BOY SLAYER GIVEN
LIFE PRISON TERMHubert Nicolls, Jr., Happy Jury Didn't Find Him Insane

Asotin, Wash.—(P)—Convicted of murder, 12-year-old Hubert Nicolls, Jr., faced life imprisonment in the penitentiary today with a degree of happiness.

Smiling on the jury that took two ballots to find him guilty yesterday of shooting Sheriff John Wormell, 73, during a grocery robbery Aug. 5, the frail 60-pound school boy said:

"Well, I'm glad its over, and I'm happy they didn't send me to an insane asylum, for even smart men go nuts in a madhouse."

Superior Judge E. V. Kuykendall ordered the boy returned to the court room today to hear the life sentence pronounced. It was made mandatory by the verdict.

At the outset, Hubert's attorneys admitted he shot the officer, leaving the jury to decide only whether he had been mentally responsible, and if so, whether he should be hanged or imprisoned for life.

The defense re-enacted scenes from Hubert's brief life, emphasizing unhappiness at home, where his parents, one of them insane, quarreled frequently.

NAVY LEAGUE SCORES
PRESIDENT'S POLICIES

Washington—(P)—Charges of "abysmal ignorance" on the part of President Hoover and subordination of American sea forces to those of other powers form the spearhead of the Navy League's latest attack on the administration's naval policies.

Renewing its opposition to the proposed world armament building holiday, the league also revives the ghost of an old controversy between the chief executive and the senate.

It suggests that secret agreements with Prime Minister MacDonald of Great Britain caused the administration's refusal to transmit to the senate foreign relations committee the full record of its negotiations and possible commitments preparatory to the London naval conference of 1930.

Bandit Gangs Grow More
Active In China Strife Zone

Tokio—(P)—Shadows of trouble generated by the controversy over the Japanese occupation of southern Manchuria crept into the northern portion of that province today, threatening to develop into a serious situation there. Disorganized soldiers who had become bandits were reported increasingly active. Vernacular newspapers here said they were endangering railroad property in which the Japanese are interested.

The Russian government, which with China jointly controls the Chinese Eastern railway across northern Manchuria, was said by the vernaculars to have sent three armored trains with 500 troops to the vicinity of Tsisihar to protect the line but this could not be confirmed at the war office here.

Rengo News, agency (Japanese) said bandits last night attacked a Japanese garrison near Kikou-sha. One Japanese officer and two men

TWO SONS GIVEN
BULK OF ESTATE
LEFT BY EDISONAsked to Decide Bequests to Children by Former Marriage

Newark, N. J.—(P)—Thomas A. Edison left the bulk of his estate to the two sons of his second marriage, leaving it largely to them to decide how much the older children could have and how soon they could get it. He provided for his wife before he died and so left her nothing in the will filed today. The value of the estate was not mentioned in the will.

Not only were Charles Edison and Theodore Edison, sons of the inventor and the widow, named as executors but they were also made residuary legatees with full power to distribute the residue among themselves and their half brothers and sisters whenever they deem wise and in such proportion as they think best.

The will spoke of the widow as "my dear wife" and explained that no provision was made for her in the will because Edison had settled sufficient property on her while he lived.

Division of Estate
The inventor left all his shares of capital stock in Thomas A. Edison Industries, Inc., to Charles and Theodore. His railroad and government and first mortgage bonds in the Edison Portland Cement company are left to the six children for equal division, but other securities are left to the children in the proportion of 40 per cent each for Charles and Theodore and 5 per cent each to the children of the first marriage.

The four children of the first marriage are Mrs. Marian Osler, Thomas A. Edison, Jr., Mrs. John Byrne Sloan, and William L. Edison.

The will was dated Feb. 1, 1928, and there was a codicil dated July 30, 1931, just before the first serious attack of the illness from which Edison never recovered.

The codicil was necessitated by reorganization of the business formerly conducted by the Edison Portland Cement company. The codicil bequeathed the inventor's capital stock to the two younger children and small percentages of certain debenture notes to the others.

Charles Edison said shortly after the will was filed that the Thomas A. Edison Industries, Inc., has a surplus of $7,000,000. Unofficially, however, it was stated the corporation in its entirety is valued at approximately $12,000,000.

Although not stipulated in the will itself, the Edison estate at Llewellyn Park, on the outskirts of West Orange, N. J., was left by the inventor to his wife. It consists of 13 acres of beautiful countryside and is valued at upwards of $200,000.

SURGEONS ASKED TO HELP IDENTIFY GIRLPeculiar Scar May Be Clew
to Name of Victim in Shawano-co Slaying

Shawano—(P)—Wisconsin surgeons were called upon by authorities today to aid in the identification of the body of a young woman whose body, pierced by a bullet, was found in a gunny sack on the edge of a swamp near Mattoon.

Scores of persons have viewed the body without identifying it. One characteristic, a peculiar scar the result of an appendectomy, may result in the identification, Dr. Edward L. Milobach, Milwaukee pathologist, said.

The scar is about four and one half inches long, curving slightly to form a crescent. Dr. Milobach, called here to assist Shawano authorities in the investigation said there were probably not more than 50 persons in the state who bore a similar mark of incisions. District Attorney Louis Cattau appealed to surgeons to assist in the identification.

Fingerprints of the dead woman were distributed to large midwestern cities in hopes that she might become known.

Two separate efforts by Appleton people to identify the body of a pretty, bobbed-haired girl whose body was found in a sack on a swamp on the edge of the Shawano Indian reservation near Mattoon Tuesday proved fruitless today.

One Appleton man, who saw a girl with a rather rough-looking man last Saturday night, was unable to identify the girl as being the one he saw. Another Appleton man, who said the description resembled that of a former Appleton girl, also was unable to identify the body. One of the men was taken to Shawano by Sheriff John Laper and the other was taken there by Officer Fred Arndt of the Appleton police department.

The Russians apparently offered some slight objections to the Japanese making the repairs on the ground that the bridge might be used for Japanese troop movements north of the Nonni river.

BULLETIN

Minneapolis—(P)—The University of Minnesota today investigated receipts of letters to football players offering money to "throw" the Big Ten game with Wisconsin Saturday but refused to take the proposals seriously. Three players were offered $1,500 each if they would "do their best to throw the game away to the Badgers." The letters were on stationery of a Madison, Wis., hotel (Lorraine) and postmarked there.

MUST CUT COSTS
OF GOVERNMENT,
EXPERT STATESTaxes Have Reached Point
Beyond Which People
Can't Pay, He Says

The cost of government, national and local, has reached a point beyond the country's capacity to pay, declared Morris Edwards, of Washington, D. C., in a talk before a joint meeting of the city luncheon clubs and the Appleton Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon at Conway hotel. Mr. Edwards is associated with the taxation division of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

"Sharp and immediate retrenchment is needed in all public expenditures and it is the duty of every citizen to see that they are made," Mr. Edwards said. "It is time to stop sitting back and criticizing the public officials. The way to lower taxes lies in a sane and sensible budget which will permit every branch of the government to live within its income—and that income must not be too high."

Mr. Edwards pointed out that in 1931 the nation closed its fiscal year with a deficit of $908,000,000 for the first time since the war. In the fiscal year, he said, the deficit alone was $462,000,000 and the possibility of a deficit of $1,250,000,000 is faced. The United States faces the bitter task of balancing its budget and it must be done soon, he said.

This same condition, he pointed out, is faced by states and local communities. Taxes have been raised steadily because of huge expenditures for public improvements constantly sought by an ever-growing demand from the voters, and by excessive cost of the antiquated form of government still in use.

Taxes Increased

In 1913 about one-fourteenth of a man's income went into taxes. Today this has increased to one-sixth or one-seventh, which means that every man must work one day of the week to pay the costs of govern-

MRS. JUDD'S STORY IS DENIED BY MOTORMAN

Phoenix, Ariz.—(P)—New evidence intended to contradict the story of Winnie Ruth Judd and indicating that possibly she had an accomplice in the slaying of Miss Hedvig Samuelson and Mrs. Agnes LeRoy here two weeks ago was being rounded up by Phoenix authorities today.

Mrs. Judd stated she shot both women the morning of Oct. 17, as the climax of a quarrel over social affairs. She admitted placing the bodies in trunks and sending them to Los Angeles.

A street car motorman in Phoenix, Benjamin W. Jurgemeyer, said yesterday that Mrs. Judd was a passenger on his car the night of Oct. 16, getting off the car near the LeRoy-Samuelson apartment to a point near her own home. Mrs. Judd had alleged she remained at the home of her two victims the night of the slayings.

Legless Man Admits Part in Robbery

Chicago—(P)—Rocco Russo, legless chauffeur of a bandit getaway car, confessed his part in the $3,500 robbery of the National Discount company at Milwaukee, waived extradition and was taken to Wisconsin today for trial.

JUSTICE O. W. HOLMES

Washington—(P)—The absence of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes from the sessions of the supreme court this week has aroused apprehension among close friends that he may be unable to continue actively the discharge of his duties to the close of the present term of court in June. The jurist and author was 90 last March and seemingly has lost much vitality during the last summer. The increased feebleness has been attributed to a mild attack of lumbago.

Jerusalem—(P)—"A conference of kings" on a scale greater than those of Biblical times will be held here in December. At least a dozen crowned potentates and a score of ruling princes are expected.

Problems concerning the future of the Near East and the Moslem world will be discussed. Invitations have already been sent to all Moslem kings, princes, emirs and rulers in North Africa, the Near East, Arabia and India.

The question of naming Prince Abdel Mejid, former caliph and sultan of Turkey, as titular spiritual head of the Mohammedan world, with his throne in Jerusalem, will also come up. The former caliph, who was expelled by Mustafa Kemal Pasha after the Turkish nationalist government had divorced the state from the church, is now living in exile in France. He is expected to come to the "council of kings" and may proclaim himself caliph, or official head of the Moslem communities of the world, which number nearly 225,000,000 souls.

One message from Beirut, capital of Syria, states that King Faisal of Iraq has come to an understanding with the former caliph whereby the Indian and Moslem rulers would be willing to provide funds in order to maintain the caliphate in Jerusalem.

HITS MONEY HOARDING

Body Urges Resumption of Normal Buying by Employed Persons

Washington—(P)—Sharply criticizing some classes of Americans for their fear of financial loss, the planning committee of President Hoover's unemployment relief organization has outlined a ten-point program to better the domestic situation.

The committee declares that while it may be true that normal good business must await removal of adverse world conditions, "it is certain we delay recovery by passively accepting our relation to the international situation and in failing to make a concerted determined effort to correct domestic conditions."

Headed by Harry A. Wheeler of Chicago, it presented the program to Chairman Clifford last yesterday.

The report urges resumption of normal buying by persons who have jobs and advises these money individuals who hide away from money which might be mixing freely in trade channels.

Its findings are commended to the country by Clifford as requiring "immediate and thoughtful consideration of all individuals and organizations to the end that so far as possible and they may be promptly translated into action."

He cites the committee as an answer to the insistent demand for appointment of an economic council to determine what could be done to improve business.

Where husbands are making a living, the committee recommends that employment of wives be looked into. It also urges immediate action to give needy "white collar" workers part time employment, at least.

Also on the committee's program are proposals to spread available work as much as possible; speeding up of authorized public works; making district and community surveys in search for emergency employment opportunities; and a survey to determine the possibility of transferring surplus labor from cities to farms on a work-for-keep basis during the winter.

The Wheeler report completes the third major phase of the Clifford organization. Previous reports dealt with mobilization of community relief funds and coordination of regional plans for administering aid.

The ten point program in the Wheeler report follows:

"United national action to encourage every American citizen now employed to resume normal buying—to use available income to purchase goods normally needed and in the replacement of which labor is employed—is a condition precedent to any hopeful program to constructively increase employment; continued and further restriction of consumption of goods and of expenditures for improvements and replacements inevitably will offset any and every effort for emergency relief."

"Public confidence in our financial and credit structures must be reestablished. Withdrawal of money from circulation for hoarding seriously restricts credit and operates to delay business recovery. The creation of National Credit corporation and such further agencies, either public or private, heretofore suggested by the president to insure further and more certain fluidity of banking resources, will bring ready response in increased activity in productive and distributive forces of the country."

"In addition to expansion of basic credit facilities, including those already instituted by the president, bankers of the United States may make their effective contribution to the national program for resumed normal activities, through assuming as liberal as possible toward the credit requirements of their average customer."

Morgan Partner Asks Reich To Take Lead On Reparations

THINKS FRANCE WOULD NOT BE 'UNREASONABLE'

Lamont Says American Finance Has Carried Too Great a Burden

New York—(P)—Thomas W. Lamont of the firm of J. P. Morgan and Company, writing in the Saturday Review of Literature today, calls upon Germany to take the initiative for a direct readjustment with France on the reparations problem.

It is not now a matter for America to urge, said Lamont, who was a member of the committee of experts who drew up the Young plan. Germany, he said, should not expect President Hoover to save the situation for them.

The financier advised Germany to stop agitating for revision of the Versailles treaty, expressing the opinion that the French will be found to be not "unreasonable" concerning any revision that may be justified provided it comes about through "orderly processes."

"We may say," he wrote, "that for 12 years, ever since 1919, the American financial or investment community has been carrying altogether too much of this reparations burden and has thus made it easier for the creditor powers to avoid seeking a really final solution of the reparations question."

American people, he said, cannot be expected to continue lending money to Germany to pay reparations. Some settlement on a realistic basis, he thought, has now become essential.

Neel Tariff Slash
Some "well considered move" for tariff reduction is essential to international economic recovery, Lamont said. He added that America could not permanently reconcile her policy of high protectionism with her position as the world's leading creditor.

"Neither Germany, France nor any other country should gain the idea," he wrote, "that President Hoover, having undertaken his one year debt holiday to meet an immediate emergency, is necessarily called upon to make the next move. This whole problem of international indebtedness is not now 'up to' the American government. President Hoover has made a great and helpful gesture."

... It now becomes the prime business of the European governments to undertake to settle the questions of reparations, and, that without American initiative."

The article made a strong appeal for tariff revision as an essential prerequisite to world rehabilitation. "American bankers and investors have about come to the point where they will no longer feel safe in making loans abroad while their government continues to stick rigidly

That's Degree No. 28 for Hoover

There was another honorary degree—his twenty-eighth—awaiting President Hoover when he attended the sesquicentennial celebration at Yorktown, Va. A newly-made Doctor of Laws, he is seen here, right, with Dr. James Dillard, rector of William and Mary College, after the conferring of the degree. The President already had received honorary degrees from Brown, the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, Johns Hopkins, George Washington, Dartmouth, Rutgers, University of Alabama, Oberlin, Karlsruhe Technical College, Liege, Brussels, Warsaw, Cracow, Oxford, Rensselaer, Tufts, Swarthmore, Williams, Manchester, Prague, Ghent, Lemberg and Cornell College.

4 CASES OF DISEASE REPORTED IN COUNTY

Four cases of contagion were reported from Outagamie-co in the week ending Oct. 24, according to a report received by Miss Marie Klein, county nurse. It was the second successive week that no diseases has been reported from Appleton. Places reporting disease were: town of Black Creek, whooping cough, one; Kaukauna, tuberculosis, two; and New London, scarlet fever, one.

to a tariff policy that threatens to take away from foreign borrowers the means for repayment of such loans.

BETTER TRADE REPORTED ON PACIFIC COAST

Improvement Apparent in General Trade Outlook in Many Cities

San Francisco—(P)—Glints of sunshine, breaking through rifts in the business clouds of the Pacific coast, are spreading financial warmth to the farmer, the manufacturer, the storekeeper and the laborer.

The hen's cackle may be no louder, but it is more tuneful to the farmer's ear. The golden cream in the milk pail and the golden grain in the bin no longer are reduced to fool's dust. Eggs, butter, grain and dairy products, along with other products of the soil in the west, are putting a few more coins in the agriculturist's jeans.

A weighty factor in the Pacific northwest is wheat, the price of which has turned up abruptly. "More than 25 per cent higher than prices obtainable earlier in the season," is the way R. J. Stephens, Spokane, manager of the Farmers National Grain corporation put it.

With an upturn in price of 40 per cent since January, butter has indeed taken on an aureate hue. The hen that lays the golden egg hasn't been hatched as yet, but golden specks in the way of higher prices have been noted. These products affect the pocketbook of the average farmer all over the coast.

Raisins in the San Joaquin valley of California, where vineyards have been pulled in an effort to combat over-production, have been selling at steadily rising prices for months. Toward the close of the shipping season the price of grapes turned upward.

In manufacturing lines, commercial survey agencies note gains in employment and activity in shops turning out wearing apparel, lingerie, especially millinery and shoes for midday.

Records of the California state division of labor statistics show a gain of 12.3 per cent in payrolls of textile companies from August to September. Other lines in which state statisticians found gains in employment or wages, or both, are: Metal trades, furniture factories, leather and rubber goods makers, publishing, paper products, clothing, millinery, laundering and a miscellaneous group.

Tariff reviews have consistently placed the total of the coast steel business ahead of last year. Sales for major jobs were reported by the magazine Steel to be $22,000 tons, compared with $21,000 in the like period of the previous year, a gain of 23 per cent. ## PLAN CEREMONY FOR TROOP 1 BOY SCOUTS

Several boy scouts will receive awards at the court of honor ceremony to be conducted for Troop 1 youngsters in St. Joseph parish school hall at 7:30 Thursday evening according to Al Stoegebauer, scoutmaster. An individual stunt program also will be staged following the ceremony. Charles Wilkner of Troop 2, First Methodist Episcopal church, will give instructions in handicraft following the ceremony.

state projects played a large part in the advance.

Shopkeepers and clerks have just a little less time to twiddle their thumbs, for gains in trade have appeared here and there. Nineteen department and similar stores in representative cities reported to the federal reserve bank here that their September sales were larger on a cash basis than for September of 1930. Most trade surveys, including Dun's and Bradstreet's, found retail trade holding even with last year, or virtually so, on a basis of volume of goods moved.

Shipping Improves
More ships are plying the seas, and carrying something besides ballast. A notable increase was reported in shipments of Pacific coast goods in intercoastal trade to Atlantic ports. Exports from Oakland, for example, rose 12 per cent from August to September, said the report of the board of port commissioners.

Reports from chamber of commerce officials in virtually all major coast cities indicated favorable outlooks. Individual instances of business gains and plant expansions were cited.

The Sacramento chamber found wholesale trade ahead of last year, with retailers keeping pace with 1930.

Building straighter and smoother highways stimulated employment in all coast cities. Around Portland, Ore., there was a rush to get construction well along before winter, while in California work went ahead with big projects.

Shafts of business sunshine have permeated the depths of the forests in Washington, which reported some pickup in lumbering. Eight more mills around Aberdeen resumed operations this month, putting 750 men back to work and increasing the active mills in that area to 26. Only eight mills remain closed. Additional pulp wood cutters also were put to work.

Pocket checkbooks are being used again, for the volume of checks handled by banks—a prime indicator of general business—has shown a strengthening tendency lately. The total for 27 cities, reported by the San Francisco Federal Reserve bank, showed a gain of more than 15 per cent last week over the previous week. All but two of the cities showed gains.

Three Proposed Measures Await Recommendation of Council Group

The finance committee will meet at city hall at 4:30 Friday afternoon to consider bills to be presented to the next meeting of the common council.

With one of the smallest dockets of committee work in months, only four committees are scheduled to meet before next Wednesday night. The street and bridge committee will discuss projects against the paving of Brewster-st from Oneida to Meade-st, and W. Fourth-st from S. Mason to Story-st, and a resolution to install automatic signals at the S. Lawrence crossing where the main line of the Ashland division of the Chicago and North Western Railway crosses.

Three proposed ordinances, the licensing of motor buses, the contagious abortion amendment to the milk ordinance, and a change in the zoning ordinance, are before the ordinance committee. They also will consider a resolution and two petitions concerning the adoption of the moving picture ordinance.

Before the planning commission is the application of Phil Crabb for the transfer of lot 11, block 96 into the local business district, and the police and license committee will discuss the request of Arnold Schultz to have his Class A permit transferred from 605 W. College-ave to 324 E. College-ave.

Warden Wonders About Capone Status In Jail

Chicago—(P)—The question which worries Warden David Moneyppenny is whether Al Capone shall scrub and mop.

These menial labors, performed alongside wife, deserters, alimony dodgers, and ordinary thugs, the warden of the county jail said, would keep Al's mind off his troubles.

As for troubles, Moneyppenny asserts the scarface gang overlord has many.

Now in jail where he sits pending appeal from the federal prison term of 11 years imposed for evading income tax payments, Warden Moneyppenny says that Capone merely sits and reads and thinks. Mostly he reads.

While his attorney, Michael J. Ahern, considers whether to appeal to the United States Supreme court for Capone's admission to bail pending appeal from conviction in Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson's court, the tall, burly gangster has nothing to do but read detective stories.

Moneyppenny has expressed the opinion that these might not be any too good for Al. He intimated scrubbing and mopping are more constructive. The warden, however, cannot force Capone to scrub if the gangster doesn't want to.

Capone had for company, until yesterday, Philip D'Andrea, his bodyguard who was found in contempt of court for carrying a pistol into federal court during Al's trial. D'Andrea was sentenced yesterday to serve six months' sentence, but he was granted a fortnight's freedom to attend the hospitalization of his aged mother. She is ill, the court was told, and unadvised of her son's predicament.

Ahern said he was still undecided about appealing to the supreme court. If he should decide against such procedure, he may ask the U. S. court of appeals to vacate its order granting the gangster a super-sedeas staying execution of the prison sentence. While Capone stays in the county jail, he does not get credit toward his 11-year term.

RUSH CONSTRUCTION WORK ON NEW CHURCH

Construction work on the new First English Lutheran church building is being rushed in an effort to get the structure under cover as soon as possible. Workmen expect to have the roof completed before Dec. 1.

Most of the wood frame construction work on the new parsonage in the rear of the church building has been completed, and stone is being erected for the walls. Most of the stonework for the side walls of the church has been erected.

CHEESE FEDERATION TO LIMIT BUSINESS

Milwaukee—(P)—The Milwaukee Sentinel, in a special dispatch from Monroe, Wis., today said operations of the National Cheese Producers' federation in that territory were due to end in regard to handling foreign types of cheese about May 1. The paper said most producers of Swiss and Limburger cheese would refuse to renew their contracts.

Yesterday, advices from Madison announced incorporation of the Lafayette County Dairy Products company for setting up an independent marketing and warehouse unit at Darlington.

18 STUDENT CLUBS EXPLORE VARIOUS FIELDS AT SCHOOL

Program for Different Groups to Get Under Way Next Week

Clubwork in 18 different fields will begin next week at Roosevelt Junior high school. Students will learn archery, how to cook outdoor meals, they will take dramatics and experiment in chemistry, tumble in the gymnastics or go on imaginary tours through the Norwegian fjords in the study club.

Every year clubs are organized at the junior high schools as an outside interest for students. Each student enrolls in one club for the year according to his choice. If pupils cannot find any club which interests them they will enroll in the study group and spend the club period in study. The club activity is arranged to include a well rounded program. Teachers supervise the various clubs which meet every week.

One of the newest club projects will be the formation of a 40 piece harmonica orchestra under the direction of A. G. Oosterhouse, principal, and Miss Katherine Uglow, vocal instructor in the schools.

Boys To Cook

The old fashioned idea that boys can't cook will be dispelled in the cooking club open to junior high school boys. Ninth graders will not only learn the proper foods for boys of their age but they will learn how to prepare them and how to cook foods for camping jaunts. Miss Fern Taylor will instruct this class.

The history of archery, its fundamentals and methods as well as the construction of bows will be studied by boys in the Archery club under Frank Wilson, practical arts and printing teacher. Archery practice will be held on the outdoor range on the school playground. Other clubs for boys include the Boy Scout Advancement group under Guy Barlow, general science teacher, and the tumbling club under William Pickett, physical education instructor. The purpose of the Boy Scout group is to provide a place where scouts may receive help and instruction as they advance in scouting. This club is open only to Boy Scouts.

Folk and gymnastic dancing and clogging will be taught to girls in the dancing club which Miss Justine Elde, physical education instructor is sponsoring. This group, and the gift club, a sewing club under Miss Ardella Anderson, are the two clubs limited only to girls in the school.

Debate Drills

Debate and parliamentary drill will be conducted in a club group by Miss Marguerite Roome. Students in this club will learn how to conduct meetings, the rules of parliamentary procedure, and the facts underlying debate work. The Dramatic club, limited to 40 students, will study and dramatize short and one act plays. Miss Gladys Alger and Leo Gardiner, faculty members, are in charge of the work in this group.

Scientific experiments, primarily in chemistry, will take most of the time of students who enroll in the Experiment club under Marwyn S. Clough. The Fine Arts club is under Miss Elizabeth Clemens, supervisor of art; the Latin club under Miss Elsie Koppin which will study Latin songs, Roman life and how it influences modern living; the Know Your City club, dealing with activities of civic organizations and points

NEWSPAPER MAN ON LYCEUM PROGRAM

Frederick Snyder, World Traveler, to Give Talk to Students

Frederick M. Snyder, New York newspaperman and world traveler, will address high school students and faculty members Monday morning at a school lyceum program. His lecture will deal with the romance of news-gathering and he will discuss news from the standpoint of the reporter, the publisher and the reader. Topics of current interest will be discussed by the newspaperman, who was appointed special commissioner of the Press Congress in 1925 to establish goodwill among journalists throughout the world. He represented the Lyceum as an observer in the press section of the League of Nations at Geneva. He also served as American representative at the twenty-eighth Universal Peace Congress in Paris, a delegate to the historic conference on Life and Work in Stockholm, Sweden, the same year. Mr. Snyder has a rich background of travel and newspaper work, which he brings out in his discussions of how to keep ahead of the headlines, his topic Monday morning.

DON'T RECOMMEND USE OF ALL-NIGHT LIGHTS

The use of all night lights for poultry, except chicks during the first few weeks of the brooding period, is not advised by the poultry department of the state department of agriculture, according to John B. Hayes, an expert with the department. If lights are used, Mr. Hayes points out, the day for the flock should be limited to 12 or 13 hours; the lights should be turned on at a regular time each day; body weight should not be sacrificed for production; every possible care should be exercised to prevent fires, electrical connections should be checked and

Drainage Decreases Unfit Farm Land In County To 550 Acres

336,179 ACRES GIVEN OVER TO RAISING CROPS

Land Fit to Raise a Normal Crop Increased by 207.7 Per Cent

BY RUBY A. BLACK
(Post-Crescent Washington Bureau)
Washington—Farm land in Outagamie county unfit for the raising of any crop has been decreased by 96 per cent by draining enterprises, while land fit to raise a normal crop has been increased by 207.7 per cent since drainage work began in the state in 1870, according to the census bureau's drainage report for Wisconsin.

Although a few drainage enterprises involving about 100,000 acres in Wisconsin actually began in the 1870-79 period, real work started in 1890 and continued energetically for the next 20 years. During the past decade, a decrease has been recorded for the state as a whole.

For Outagamie county there were 619 farms reported drainage for the improvement of the land in 1930 as against 761 ten years before. In the 1930 farms of 1920 there were 20,693 acres provided with drainage, as against 26,772 acres in the 1910 farms of 1920.

Of the total 413,440 acres of land in Outagamie county, 336,179 are given over to farming.

In 1890, there were 13,700 acres of farm land in Outagamie county which had been unfit to raise any crop on before it was drained. There are now only 550 acres of farm land left in the county which are totally unfit for any crops.

Of the 22,710 acres recorded as land fit for a normal crop, only 7,380 acres were fit for normal crops before their improvement by drainage. In 1930 there were 20,870 acres of improved land in the county as against 5,468 in 1920. This is an increase of 281.7 per cent during the decade.

Since drainage projects got underway, 380 acres of woodland in Outagamie county have been cleared and cultivated. There are still 1,050 acres of woodland in the county, of which 250 acres are available for settlement.

The capital invested in drainage enterprises in Outagamie county on Jan. 1, 1930 totaled $108,865, a decrease of 7.4 per cent when compared with the $117,540 investment of Jan. 1, 1920. The estimated average cost of all drainage projects now underway is $43.38 per acre.

For the state as a whole, land fit to raise a normal crop has been increased since drainage operations began by 134,441 acres or 308 per cent to a total of 548,545 acres in 1930. During the same period there has been a decrease of 7.1 per cent in land unfit for any crop and 630,195 acres now absolutely unprofitable as farm land has been made fertile enough for crops by drainage.

The total improved land in the state equaled 631,969 acres in 1930, and there remains 157,093 acres of land unfit for crops of any kind.

The Wisconsin capital invested in drainage projects equaled $6,207,278 on Jan. 1, 1930 an increase of 49.1 per cent when compared with the $4,168,055 investment of 1920. The estimated average cost of the projects when completed is $6.97 per acre.

According to the 1930 census, 12,961 acres with an acreage of 423,000 acres were involved in drainage and 658,411 acres ten years before. Work in 1930 as against 21,838 farms of 1920, 33,663,840 acres in the state 21,874,155 are given over to farms. Every county reported some drainage work in 1930.

COLLEGE CHEERLEADERS MAY RECEIVE AWARDS

At a meeting of the Lawrence college student senate Tuesday evening, a plan was adopted whereby the cheerleaders will receive awards, a practice which was discontinued during the last few years. However, the plan must be ratified by the athletic board before it becomes legal.

According to the new plan, all of the freshman cheerleaders will receive regular varsity athletic numbers of their particular class. No award will be given for service during the sophomore year but, after serving for two years and attaining junior rank, a man is eligible for the position of head cheerleader. Service in this capacity for one year shall bring the award of a varsity "L".

It is expected that this plan will arouse interest in this type of work, thereby stimulating the enthusiasm in the college at the athletic contests.

MUST CUT COSTS OF GOVERNMENT, EXPERT STATES

Taxes Have Reached Point Beyond Which People Can't Pay, He Says

In 1913 the cost of government was $2,000,000,000 a point which was reached after 150 years of government. In 1920, 15 years later, the total had reached $14,000,000,000. Population increased 15 per cent during this period and the national wealth and income doubled. Thus in a period when population gained but 15 per cent and the national wealth and income doubled, the taxes were more than quadrupled. In addition the outstanding debt is seven times as great.

"This acute financial condition in the nation, states and cities, can be attributed only partly to the business depression," Mr. Edwards said. "It is true that during hard times business men scarcely had time to stop and rumble about high taxes. But now, when incomes are reduced, there is a greater interest being taken in the high taxes. It has served to interest in questions of taxation thousands of people to whom for years they were only remote, academic subjects, scarcely worth note."

"But the depression did not produce these conditions. They will not vanish into thin air with a return of business confidence. They grow out of the spectacle of the one of the world's leading nations pursuing for 15 years the folly of increasing taxes twice as rapidly as national income and wealth. Deficits, delinquencies in taxation, and defaults of long-term bonds are only the present symptoms of a generation of public spending beyond our means."

Live In Income
"The nation and states and cities as well, must learn to live within their income and that income must not be too high. Budgets should be adopted and strictly adhered to. Instead of the aliphid manner of determining taxes, which have been used in the past, governments should first determine how much money will be available for taxes and then wisely budget it to bring the best results possible."

Mr. Edwards urged business men of this city to not only lend their energy to present efforts to effect emergency reductions in governmental costs, but also to look beyond existing conditions and endeavor to place the structure, functions and services of government on a sounder basis. He pointed out that many illogical and unreasonable services are now rendered which can easily be cut out.

"Until we have shaken the dust from some of our most firmly ingrained traditions and institutions of governments and have determined whether they are adapted to modern necessities," he continues, "we scarcely can say that we have given our best, honest effort in solving the grave fiscal problem which we face today."

"As an immediate measure we can insist upon the more careful preparation and more realistic observance of public budgets. Only when we spend less can we tax less. We can further improve our immediate outlook by declaring a halt on the issuance of bonds for public improvements other than those of the clearest, most vital necessity. Only when we pay our present debts and adopt a more cautious policy in contracting new ones can we lay a foundation for easier conditions."

Don't Blame Officers
Mr. Edwards severely criticized those voters who have the habit of castigating public officials, charging them with personal or group responsibility for the ills of the country and abolitions of government, belaboring them on one hand to undertake every conceivable sort of public service and on the other, to reduce taxes and debts.

"We like to talk of divorcing public finance from politics. It is as easy to separate paper from the wall. Public finance is politics and public financial decisions are taken by political means. It is incomprehensible men who personify political life should be publicly abused for what after all is responsibility to political influence. As a people, we make the conditions under which our public life is carried on, and once the conditions fail to produce exactly the results we desire, certainly it is not logical to blame for the failure those whose every operation is restricted by conditions we have imposed," Mr. Edwards said.

"It is easy to say that public officials should have sufficient courage to conserve the interests of the productive and taxpaying portion of the economic structure. Call it courage if you will, but it is really political suicide. The man who too strenuously resists the demands of every minority usually finds that his minority is out to vote against him on election day while the conservative majority he protected is on the golf links, forgetting its duty as citizens."

Name Committee
Mr. Edwards suggested that the groups represented at the meeting yesterday appoint a committee of men to sit with the common council when it is deliberating on its budget. He urged that every step be taken to curtail expenditures. He said the city should get along with absolute essentials until it was in a better financial condition. "I said that in the past only the most desirability of a public improvement was almost enough to warrant its completion. He said all unnecessary improvements should be abandoned and all improvements that were made

COUNTY CLERKS IN CONFERENCE HERE

Annual Meeting of County Association in Progress in City Today

Thirty town, city and village clerks were in attendance this morning at the courthouse at the annual meeting of the Outagamie County Town, City and Village Clerks' association. Two addresses were presented this morning by Oscar J. Schmiege, assemblyman from this district, and Leo J. Toonen, assessor of incomes. Mr. Schmiege discussed changes in the state statutes affecting clerks and Mr. Toonen discussed assessments reports. Following the talks the clerks held an open forum discussion.

At noon the clerk attended a banquet at Hotel Northern. L. Hugo Keller, acting as toastmaster. The speaker was H. L. Bowby, Appleton, who discussed "Public Officials."

This afternoon the clerks were scheduled to continue their round table discussions at the courthouse. After the conference there was to be election of officers. Present officers are Donald Edrick, town of Ellington, president and John E. Hantschel, Appleton, secretary and treasurer.

BOARD TO MEET

The Chamber of commerce directors will meet Friday noon at Hotel Northern. Committee and division reports are to be heard. The finance committee will meet following the board session.

should be done in an economical manner.

The speaker used several illustrations to show that points he had made in his talk were being successfully applied. He said that over 700 towns, cities and villages have appointed committees of business men to sit with their common councils. He said that the cities of San Francisco, Kansas City and Schenectady had strikingly illustrated what could be done with determining how much their people could afford to pay in taxes and then deciding how this amount could be spent to the best advantage. He said the counties of Indiana are giving a good example of what can be done to cut taxes. He said that counties there are reducing their budgets from 20 to as high as 40 per cent.

Two Remedies
"There are only two ways to bring about a change," Mr. Edwards stated. "One is to devise new ways to raise taxes and the other is to pull in the public belt and economize. Already taxes are too high, so obviously the first method is practically out of the question. Therefore, the governmental units must turn to the more painful and second method."

Mr. Edwards said that he is pleased to note that the city of Appleton has one of the smallest bonded debts of a city of its size in the state or region. But he pointed out that even here it would be very likely that ways and means to economize and cut taxes could be found.

The speaker also declared that Wisconsin's reputation for being a state of high taxes, where industries are discriminated against, is undeserved. He said it is as undeserved as Chicago's reputation for a city of crime. He said Wisconsin's tax rates are no higher, if as high, as in other states, and that industries are treated as well here as elsewhere. He said he couldn't understand why the state permits such a reputation to stand.

He also called attention to the severe criticism which has arisen as a result of the recent recommitment of the city. He praised the Wisconsin Tax commission and the men working for it and said they are capable and just.

DISCUSSES VALUES OF LABORATORY STUDY

"Laboratory Studies as an Aid to Invention," was the subject of an address given by Dr. R. M. Bagg at a convocation of Lawrence college students Wednesday morning. Stating that the progress in all sciences is based upon experiment, Dr. Bagg pointed out that through experiments, technical skill has solved many riddles of the universe.

In enumerating the benefits which the student derives from laboratory work, Dr. Bagg said: "Laboratory work aids the student in clearly understanding scientific phenomena, secondly it develops the power of reasoning, as perhaps no other subject can do, and it cannot be denied that right and logical thinking is of paramount importance in any vocation. Then, in the laboratory the students develop precision and accuracy, and it quickens the process of thinking. Seek the joy that can come only from discovery. Remember, he profits most who discovers something of value to human welfare."

CONSERVATIVE GAINS SEEN IN RUSSIA AS VICTORY FOR REDS

Moscow —(AP)—Great Britain's Conservatives may have elected the greatest majority a single party had in the house of commons, the Moscow press said today, but the British election really was a victory for Communism.

The newspaper Pravda, said: "The great majority of Conservatives means new attacks on Soviet Russia but it also means excesses by the bourgeoisie on England's working classes which will hasten mass revolution and strengthen the Communist influence in the British empire."

The newspaper Izvestia, heading its comment "The Victory of Reaction," said the most significant feature was not the Conservative gain but the fact that victory was won under the slogan of protectionism. "England as a free trade country is passing from the world stage," this editorial said, "This gives new impetus to protectionism in all capitalist countries and increases the danger of war. This can only hasten the movement toward Socialism."

EFFORTS MADE TO BOOST U. S. GOLD OUTPUT

Mining Experts Attempting to Solve Obstacles to Production

New York.—(P)—Although various obstacles are in the way, efforts are being made during the coming year to increase the production of gold in the United States. Mining experts are now perfecting their plans to get more of the yellow metal out of the ground.

The present incentive is due to the low cost of commodities generally, more reasonably priced labor than in a number of years, and the fact that there is a fixed price for gold of $20.67 an ounce. In other words, the going mines can make money under present conditions and the producers intend to "strike while the iron is hot."

For the first time in many years, the United States, for the moment, is third among world gold producers, having dropped from second place when Canada increased her production. It is estimated that the total quantity of gold mined in America during 1931 will be around 2,200,000 ounces while the probable Canadian production will be in the neighborhood of 2,700,000 ounces. The Rand mines of the Transvaal lead all producers with an annual total of over 10,000,000 ounces.

While the views of mining experts differ considerably regarding potential production of the yellow metal in the United States, there are some who insist that an annual total of some 3,000,000 ounces is not only possible but probable if the low-grade producer is given encouragement to operate and is properly protected against variations in commodity price levels, so that he may show a profit on the present fixed metal price.

See Ultimate Decline

Some mining engineers maintain that the world's gold production will remain stable at approximately 20,000,000 ounces annually for the next several years and that, not later than 1935, a slow decrease probably will set in bringing world production down to approximately 15,000,000 ounces yearly by 1940.

Others, however, see an increase of some 1,000,000 ounces in the world's output this year with a similar increase in 1932. Domestic gold output is estimated, declined about 45 per cent between 1915 and 1929. This was principally due, it is said, to the rise in commodity prices making the handling of low-grade ores unprofitable.

Although England has gone off the gold standard and Canada has prohibited the export of gold, with a resultant drop in the exchange value of the pound and the Canadian dollar of around 20 per cent, the price paid for gold is based on the par value of both currencies. The mines, therefore, receive a bonus for each ounce of the metal which will make their receipts equal to those under the gold standard. At the same time, labor is paid on the basis of the decreased exchange value of the currency and the advance in commodity prices has not equaled the bonus received by the mines. Therefore, it is figured both the Canadian and African producers stand to profit nicely, at least for the time being.

Notwithstanding the seeming eagerness of various mines to increase production, some statisticians have called attention to the theory that the supply of gold apparently had nothing to do with the economic decline of 1921 and the present one. Carl W. Snyder of the Federal Reserve bank of New York, said in this respect:

"When we consider the decline in prices and in values in relation to the basic monetary supply, we are met with the striking fact that it does not seem in any way related to a scarcity of gold."

Existence Of New Giant Planet Forecast By Prof

New York.—(P)—Prediction of a new, giant planet lying far outside the present limits of the solar system was received today from Prof. William H. Pickering, internationally known astronomer at the Mount Wilson, Jamaica private observatory.

He is one of the two astronomers who predicted the existence and position of Pluto, the new "Planet X," discovered two years ago. He calls the new unknown planet P.

This planet he estimates as the third most massive of the sun's family, surpassed only by mighty Jupiter which is about twice its size, and ringed Saturn. His computations show its diameter at 44,000 miles, more than five times that of the earth.

Its distance from the sun appears to range from 5,000 million miles to 9,000 million, or 55 to 95 times the earth's distance.

Its elliptical orbit accounts for the variations in distance. Planet P takes a computed 656 years to make one circuit around the sun. It is so big Professor Pickering says that when telescopes locate the planet it will show a clearly defined disc. Pluto, about the earth's size, and but half as far from the sun as the calculated position of Planet P.

shows only as a point of light even in the world's largest telescope.

The evidence of this massive unknown world is the present peculiar action of the planet Uranus, one of the outer members of the solar system. Uranus, in astronomical language, is "perturbed." This means that Uranus is displaced from its proper orbit. The displacement is due, in Professor Pickering's calculations, to the giant planet, and shows its size and position.

The planet Neptune, which circles the sun farther out than Uranus, is too far away from Planet P at present to be displaced by it. But Dr. Pickering says Neptune too will be in position to be "perturbed" in the year 2040.

Other gravitation clues to the giant P are found in the orbits of 16 comets. These all belong to a single group, which Dr. Pickering says was brought together by the action of planet P in "capturing" them. This means that the unknown planet holds a dominant gravitation pull over them during their outer flights far from the sun. He estimates that these comets require on the average about 480 years to make one trip around their elongated orbits.

Two other unknown planets, both smaller and not so far distant, Dr.

shows only as a point of light even in the world's largest telescope.

THREE STATES ELECT CHIEFS NEXT WEEK

Mississippi, Kentucky and
New Jersey Go to Polls
Tuesday

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Three states — Mississippi, Kentucky and New Jersey—will elect governors at next Tuesday's off-year elections.

In Mississippi where Democratic nomination is equivalent to election, the voting will be hardly more than a formality. Mike Conner is the Democratic nominee. He is to take office Jan. 1.

The campaign in Kentucky has been confined for the most part to the administration of the state

Pickering says appear to be knocking for recognition with their gravitational messages. There can scarcely be only doubt he thinks that one of these two "perturbed" Uranus in 1924.

These messages should also be registered by the other outer planets, Neptune and Pluto, but both are said by Dr. Pickering too recently discovered to furnish the information. Neptune has not yet completed one circuit of his orbit since his discovery in 1846. It will be several hundred years before Pluto's first "year" is completed.

highway department. Ruby Laffoon, circuit judge, is the Democratic candidate. He favors the present partisan arrangement of the highway commission. Mayor William Harrison of Louisville, leading the Republican ticket, would return the board to its former bi-partisan setup.

New Jersey's contest has been the warmest of the three by far. In that state the governorship is sought by David Baird, Jr., Republican, and Harry Moore, Democrat. Each has campaigned with vigor for several weeks, the issues being numerous but with no particular national significance.

FARMERS AND RESOLUTIONS

Seven hundred delegates at a farmers' get-together conference at Shawano recently adopted resolutions to the general effect that "industry should more nearly pay its own unemployment costs," instead of "shifting this whole burden to the taxpayers," and that if wage earners only had steadier jobs and therefore a heavier purchasing power "there would be a better demand and a better price for farm products."

All of this was preliminary to a resolution urging "the coming special session of the legislature to enact an unemployment reserve law, providing for compensation to laid-off employees."

Now it takes no graduate of a detectives' college to see that this conference was politically handled. How did it know that "the coming special session of the legislature" was to be empowered by the governor with the right to consider unemployment insurance, without which authority no such bill could be introduced?

It is also significant that the farmers, who are not easily moved by flaming oratory, would only pass the resolution on the condition "that under no circumstances should a tax on property be levied to support the unemployment reserve fund set-up."

In other words, the farmers voted to help donate someone else's money to a proposition that might indirectly help them and wouldn't cost them anything. Resolutions offered upon that basis and with such an inducement are likely to be passed without much regard to their merits.

There should not be any haste to turn thumbs down on any unemployment insurance matter. The matter is much too serious to be lightly cast aside. Rather should there be an intense desire to examine each proposed matter carefully in the hope that it may be found meritorious and practical.

But these farmers who were induced to pass this resolution, what do they know about the proposed "unemployment reserve law"? What unemployment reserve law was intended? What are its features? What its provisions? What the principle upon which it is based?

Although Assemblyman Groves spoke of the passage of the resolution by the farmers "as of tremendous significance" we do not think it is half as significant as the terms of the proposed bill.

If we are to have unemployment insurance worthy of the name it will have to be paid from funds earned, then saved and next soundly invested. To follow any other principle is merely to blow soap bubbles.

A COLD WEATHER DANGER
With the approach of cold weather comes the desire to again warn the motoring public against a seasonal danger which takes an annual toll of many lives. It is the ever-present deadly monoxide gas of a motor's exhaust.

This peril appears each year just as soon as it gets cold enough to tempt the motorist to start his engine before opening the garage doors.

Public discussion of the subject has been so general and so many warnings broadcast that everyone by this time should know that exhaust gases are poisonous. Yet news items are continually appearing citing fatalities from this cause. There will be more as the weather gets colder.

Carelessness, not ignorance, is generally the cause of these accidents. The victim does not think the fumes will take effect quickly, yet the gas is so insidious, so powerful and so quick in action that he is soon beyond help and before realizing his danger.

There is only one safe rule: Never start the motor, even momentarily, without opening the garage doors, and always stop the engine before closing them.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS

What does the sweeping conservative victory in England, the most complete in a century, mean in the matter of our own approaching national election?

It means that the Nordic peoples, using that term in a broad sweep covering all those who coolly reason and settle their problems of life and of government without violent fits of passion which accomplish nothing, are thinking and thinking fairly and deeply.

People are thinking a great deal better than some of the men groveling in the dust for their votes.

They are thinking a great deal fairer than those who criticize them.

Labor governments have had a difficult time of it, sometimes because of unfit leaders and a failure to realize that no one can make a dollar go further than its value and that when unjust and inconsiderate burdens are thrown any place just to get rid of them there will come a time of reckoning, but have also produced some of the truly great figures in leadership of the century.

President Hoover will probably take heart, expecting a similar approval here for conservative policies. But of course the situation is quite different. For 12 years, whatever the party in power, England has been going the liberal way. During the same period of time no administration at Washington could not be classed as liberal.

The English may have thought they had journeyed far enough in one direction and that it was time to try another course. If that sort of reasoning is applied here-Mr. Hoover's days are numbered.

Moreover the leaders of the national government in England, Ramsay MacDonald and Stanley Baldwin, are both men of immense personal popularity. Their efforts at executing affairs of government have always received, if not the plaudits, at least the sympathy of the multitude.

There is a vast difference between the attitude which blames a government and the one that, though disappointed, feels the government did its best. One of course is hostility, the other friendliness. And the personal element is considerable.

DEEP SEA TREASURE

From time immemorial hunting treasure has been a powerful urge in world romance. Man in his daring exploration efforts has pretty well combed the surface of the earth so only a few black spots are left.

Those who feel there are no new adventures under the sun, or like Alexander the Great, lonesome without more worlds to conquer, forget the boundless possibilities of the sea.

Off the coast of Brest, France, a sea romance has been under way for months, the attempt of the Italian salvage ship Artiglio to recover five million dollars in gold bullion from the sunken ship Egypt, lying in four hundred feet of water. That depth is about the limit at which modern divers can now operate.

With undersea bombs and grappling hooks they have succeeded in uncovering the ship's bullion room after months of dangerous work.

New devices are in prospect which presage possible operations two thousand feet below the surface of the water. Last year off the coast of Bermuda, William Beebe and Otis Barton went to the unprecedented depth of 1,486 feet in a steel sphere with a supply of oxygen.

The possibilities for undersea exploration are immense. Many ships and countless millions lie about the muddy bottoms of the seas. What other riches or sources of adventure the ocean depths may hold, no man knows.

Three-fourths of the earth's surface is covered by water. Who can say that the riches and resources lying beneath the water are not many times greater than those discovered upon the continents?

New undersea observation devices and diving apparatus are pointing the way to these new fields of exploration and adventure. Before long perhaps, men will wander at the bottom of the sea.

Dick Whittington's cat may have lived in story; but it accompanies Dick into the stained glass of a memorial window recently placed by Lord Wakefield in the Guild hall in the city of London. RAMSAY MacDonald has been given the support of his countrymen by a swell majority, and Ramsay is the gent who a while ago, took a chance on ruining his political future by leaving his party. . . . and the English get an important election over in ten days. . . . the government can go right to work without delaying the progress of business. . . . and the politicians are the most looked-up-to gents in the nation. . . . over in these United States, well. . . . people are worrying about what Congress is going to do. . . . Congress meets in December and the results of anything it might do won't be shown for a long time. . . . and everything will be done with an eye toward the coming elections. . . . then the elections come along to jam everything up for almost a year. . . . we're just an American who doesn't know anything about running a government. . . . but we'll be darned if we're the only one. . . .

Understand that Grace Hegger Lewis, divorced from Sinclair Lewis six years ago, has written a book. The book is a slightly disguised story of the Lewis' pre-divorce life. The story, of course, is intended to do Sinclair no especial good. Which bears out Robert Louis Stevenson's advice against marrying literary people.

TURNING THE TABLES
The golf professional was ill; he called the doctor in.
"There's something wrong with me," he said.
"I'm strangely growing thin.
My muscles ache, my cheeks are pale, I've lost my appetite.
I have a gnawing pain right here, and cannot sleep at night."
The doctor looked him up and down, outside and underneath.
And said: "As far as I can tell, the trouble's with your teeth."
"My nerves are jumpy," said the pro. "It's teeth!" the doctor said.
"My back is aching all the time, and when I bend my head
I have a touch of dizziness, my stomach's out of gear,
And something dreadful's wrong with me, I very sadly fear."
"Oh, no," the doctor answer made, "You're sound as you can be.
The trouble's with your teeth, my boy. A dentist you should see."

The doctor was a golfer, too, and later filled with woe
In search of help and comfort he sought out his patient pro.
"There's something wrong with me," he sighed.
"I cannot drive at all!"
Though once my shots were long and straight,
I'm slicing every ball!"
The grinning pro observed his swing. "It can't be that," said he.
"Perhaps the trouble's with your teeth—a dentist you should see."

Personal Health Talks

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D.
Noted Physician and Author

ELEMENTARY LESSON FOR SLAVES OF THE PHYSIC HABIT
Breaking folks of the physic habit is the toughest job I have ever tackled. Teaching 'em not to be afraid of drafts or wet feet was child's play. Teaching 'em that brushing the teeth doesn't matter was a little harder, for there we barged right up against American snobbery. Teaching 'em not to shed their blood when they have to give up their tonsils was harder still, because there we encountered obstinate and mulish resistance on the part of all the old fossils of the medical profession, particularly the pee-wees in the nose and throat field. But these little skirmishes are minor affairs, after all. Breaking the physic habit is a formidable undertaking. I've been sniping away at it for ten years or so, though in a desultory way and without great expectations. Once a year or so I've brought down something, I am assured. But what does a lone bird like that among millions matter if the rest are never aware that I'm shooting at them?

The nostrum manufacturers and ghosts of venerable quack institutions may as well take notice that now that I have put aside my rifle and henceforth I'm using a machine gun. During the past two years I have been quietly trying out this new and more deadly method, and I find it will do execution enough. No doubt my technique in the working of the automatic improves with experience.

There is one little obstacle which the physic or enema addict must surmount before he or she even begins to get ready to commence to quit, and that is the precious old morbid notion, so dear to the heart of the nostrum and quackery merchant, that if the bowels don't act as the nostrum and quackery merchant says they should, you are in danger of suffering dire poisoning or what the fopish fakers in the healing racket call "auto-intoxication." Not only the frank dealers in proprietary dope and mail-order quackery promote this "auto-intoxication" or "toxin" bunk for all it is worth to them, but a considerable number of the near-scientists and the brass specialists in our regular medical ranks are quite fond of rolling the idea over the tongue, when dealing with weak-to-do or credulous customers.

Scientifically there is not even a little bit of evidence, experimental or clinical, to sustain the fancy that any such poisoning ever happens to a patient who is not sick unto death. I have no compunction about committing myself unequivocally about this, for you may be sure I have studied the question carefully before taking any such position upon it. I am reasonably confident, you see, that no one can shake my position, for it is grounded in psychology, and even the most imposing quack or brass specialist can't repeal or annul the facts or laws of physiology.

Once the victim of the constipation habit gets this quaint superstition of "auto-intoxication" out of his or her head there is hope—as a famous predecessor of mine used to say. How about your notion, numbskull? Do you know a lot about "intestinal poisoning" that isn't so?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
Safe Places to Lie
What laws or restrictions, if any, have to be observed as to the position of such remedies as — and —? These remedies are sold as cures for colds. . . . (T. K.)
Answer—Practically none, except that certain narcotic drugs must be mentioned on the label. As for the claims made for the remedies, anything goes so long as it isn't printed on the label. Lying on the label involves the risk of prosecution by federal authorities. Lying almost anywhere else is safe. I think you will find that neither nostrum is called a "cure" on the label. The manufacturers are too fussy to be caught like that.

Antidote Costs Money
Following your advice that one traveling in snake country should carry anti-venom in his emergency kit I sought to provide myself with some. I enclose the letter from the store where I buy my medicines. The price seems prohibitive. Our sons killed 35 rattlesnakes here on the ranch in the past six weeks. (Mrs. J. K.)
Answer—The letter from the store mentions a price of $10 for the package of antivenin. Well, when need arises that price is a small consideration for the great benefit the antidote confers.
Chronic Arsenic Poisoning
My trouble is chronic arsenic poisoning. I can't afford a doctor. Can you give me a good home treatment? (M. C. R.)
Answer—No. If you can't afford a doctor you should go to one of the free dispensaries or clinics for treatment. You do not explain how you know you have chronic arsenic poisoning. If you are sure about it, a course of sodium pyrophosphate (photographer's fixing chemical) will do no harm—take from 10 to 20 grains in half a glassful of water after food three times a day for two or three weeks.
Big Boy and Little Girl
Is there any objection to the marriage of people varying considerable in size? The girl is 62 inches in height, while I am 70 inches in height. (W. E. S.)
Answer—Such a difference is insignificant. (Copyright John F. Dille Co.)
Dr. Brady will answer all signed letters pertaining to health. Writers' names are never printed. Only inquiries of general interest will be answered by mail. If written in ink and stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Requests for diagnosis or treatment of individual cases can not be considered. Address Dr. William Brady, in care of this paper.

The Tinymites

By Hal Cochran
THE Travel Man said, "I'll just bet that some of this meat I can get. In fact there is a place nearby where we can buy a meal. You Times hang around and I will saunter over there and try and hurry up, a supper that. I'm certain will taste real."

It wasn't long till he returned and then the Times promptly learned that everything was ready. They could sit right down to eat. Said Scouty, "Well, that sounds just right! Most anything they serve to me will be a lovely treat."

As they sat down the Travel Man said, "Eat as slowly as you can. It isn't right to eat too fast 'twill only make you ill." So they all followed his advice. "Gee," Clowny said, "this sure tastes nice, but I am going to have to quit. I know I've had my fill."

The others, too, had had enough. They used good sense and didn't stuff. "And now let's get some exercise. 'Twill do us heaps of good," said Scouty. "If we walk around some sights of interest may be found." And so they trudged along a while, as slowly as they could.

They reached a little winding street. "Oh, look whom we are going to meet," cried Copy. "It's a native girl. She has a wee pet cat. Let's walk right up and say hello and find out where she's going to go." And that's just what the Tinymites did. And each one tipped his hat.

The little girl smiled nice and sweet and then she said, "I'm glad to meet a band of little strangers. You can meet my kitty, too. And, listen, I will show you how I make the little thing meow. This kitten almost always does whatever I tell it to."

A Bystander In Washington

BY HERBERT PLUMMER
Washington—It is the proud boast of Representative Sol Bloom of New York and his merry men of the George Washington Bicentennial commission that they can find in the writings of the first President a quotation to fit almost any situation.

High atop the Washington building in the capital the "Hon. Sol" and his historians do their work. Their goal is to so decentralize this celebration in 1932 that every hamlet, village, town and city in the country will take part.

They have gone further than that. Their latest effort is to have every department store in the country take part. A 20-page pamphlet has gone out to these stores outlining in minute detail a plan for cooperation.

Nothing has been omitted. All that a department store owner or manager has to do is to start obeying instructions given on page one and by the time he gets through on page 20 he will have succeeded in making his customers indeed George Washington-minded.

Well Organized
For Bloom instructs him on how to set up organization in every department from art to handkerchiefs. He lists each item that the various departments should have on hand. Even the beauty parlor is advised to study up on colonial hairdressing and get in a new supply of wigs.

As evidence of how thorough the plan is there even is included a recommendation that the wall spaces over the store's elevator entrances should be decorated with something connected with the life of George Washington.

But with it all Bloom makes it plain that his commission has no interest in advancing the commercial needs of any one group. Its only desire is to see that manufacturers and retail stores are in a position to serve their customers by supplying the merchandise they will require for their participation in the celebration.

That's all—
Loosening Pursestrings
Bloom's department store pamphlet was issued just about the time President Hoover was conferring with congressional leaders at the White House as to the best means of combating the economic and financial despondency the country now is feeling.

One of the reasons advanced for present conditions is that there are too many people with money reluctant to put it into circulation. Steps were taken to release such funds.

Bloom and his men made good their George Washington quotation claim. The first thing that smacks you in the eye when you examine this pamphlet is a Washington quote.

"It is not a custom with me to keep money to look at."

Today's Anniversary

ITALIAN FRONT FALLS
On Oct. 23, 1917, the Italian Isonzo front collapsed and the Austro-German army reached the outposts before Udine, where the Italian headquarters were located.

Cormons, on the plains about seven miles west of Gorizia, was captured and the armies of the central powers approached the frontier of the Italian coastal region.

But the Germans were repulsed by the French near Chaume and Courriers Wood on the western front.

The first war prisoner taken by the United States expeditionary forces (a German) died in an American field hospital in France from wounds inflicted by a United States patrol.

In eastern Europe, Germans withdrew from the Werder peninsula.

Seen And Heard In New York

BY WILLIAM GAINES
New York — That's a hackneyed old phrase—"New York does things on a grand scale." But, despite business taking the bumps, New York is planning to do things on a still grander scale, what with so many parks, boulevards and so forth being promoted; and business, of course, will profit.

Does a section of Manhattan find itself so congested with humanity that its denizens block the traffic of industry? Very well, then, let's scoop out a city block or so of structures, park the space and herd the milling mass into the clearing.

That's exactly what the Broadway association plans to have done in the garment and fur trade area, located on Seventh avenue and its intersections, between Twenty-eighth and Fortieth-sts.

More than 100,000 men and women are employed in the various branches of the industries in this section. The polyglot procession is like a tidal wave when loosed upon the streets. Thousands of other persons are attracted to this center for business purposes.

The thoroughfares, morning, noon and evening, are so congested that vehicular traffic is practically brought to a standstill.

This adjacent area exerts its influence upon a section of Broadway.

Sidewalk Sardines
"The result of the situation is that many businesses plan to quit the district when leases expire. Seven thousand establishments are directly affected by this traffic congestion."

John E. Gratke, managing director of the Broadway association was speaking.

Gratke hails from Astoria, Ore. He was a publisher there for 20 years and has been in New York eight years.

"Should wholesale removals occur, property investment staggering to the imagination would be affected. The section pays $8,411,607 (Gratke has figures at his finger tips) behind his ears) in taxes to the city every year.

"It is the tailoring territory for millions of American women.

"What are we going to do about it? We propose that the city buy up a block within this area and convert it into a park—just simply sacrifice a whole block of buildings to keep a whole territory from strangling itself to death!"

"These thousands of workers have no place to congregate in their relaxation periods now except on the sidewalks and in the streets.

"The luncheon hours present the most serious problems, so you can understand how a park would relieve the situation."

Stretch And Yawn
Will this be done?
The city administration lends a receptive ear to the association's advice. Its membership includes some of New York's shrewdest and most idealistic men of affairs: It is the Riatta's own Chamber of Commerce.

"Yes, it will be done," says Gratke. "One of these days it will seem as if it happened over night. And the next morning New York will be indifferent to the realization of another grandiose dream."

"In some cities, such an accomplishment would be enough to keep the trumpets blowing and drums beating for years."

There's one $5. Hat in Appleton that will high-hat every other

There were thousands of whittling sailors in Spain when Columbus discovered America and there will be thousands of $5 hats in Appleton when you find out that they are not like this one.

This is our $5 feature hat . . . it's totally different from any hat you've seen in a window . . . on the street . . . admired on a friend . . . or envied on an enemy.

We built this value to make a lot of people who aren't trading here realize that, for fashion, this is headquarters.

The Story of Sue

by MARGERY HALE
© 1929 BY NEA SERVICE, INC.

"In an apartment, aren't you?" Sue told Jack in answer to his question as to whether she knew where they were going to live.

"Not much, my dear! We aren't going to have other people crowding in on us. Unless you want an apartment. We're going to have a house."

"A house? Have we money?" "We will have. I forgot to tell you, but my mother left me a sort of cottage affair near a woods. I never thought about fixing it up. The tenants have made it ragged. . . but we'll have some money so we can now!"

"Grand! I can see it. White ruffled curtains with green polka dots on the kitchen windows, and a green cookie jar. . . you like cookies, don't you? And the fireplace is big, isn't it, Jack?"

"We'll make it as big as you want it if it isn't. We'll drive past on our way into town. Shall we?"

So they came just at sunset to the small white cottage, wide and long and close to the earth, sprawled out comfortably as though it liked the place where it lived and didn't intend to move. A rough cobblestone walk led across the lawn to the wide porch, and a chimney that took up a great deal of room on one side of the house was evidence that there was a fireplace.

"I've only been in it once," Jack said. "That's why I forgot it. I guess. There isn't any grass left."

"But there's a gate to the back yard and it will be grand when it's painted green. And we can have a brass knocker on the door, and when the windows are all spilling their lights across the path. . . And won't it be lovely when it snows?"

Jack laughed at Sue's enthusiasm. "You were wasted in an office. Anyone who can get excited over that place."

"But wait until you see it, Jack. do we have much money to spend? We don't need much. . . a little will do a lot. And oh yes, if you're opening your own office, instead of going in with your father, I'm going to be your secretary again, you know, to cut down expenses."

"Of course you are," He nodded. "We'll get a maid to handle this place. My father hasn't asked me yet, Sue. I think he will. He's probably waiting for me to get back."

His tone was serious now. The whinny was gone, and Sue slipped her arms around him, and kissed him first on one cheek, then the other, and then on his lips, and he held her close.

"Jack, I'll never get over being sorry that it was through our family that your father and you. . ."

"But it was through someone that you met through me that your family had to take the wallow," he answered. "We started it. Don't think about it any more."

A maternal feeling had welled up in Sue. Stronger this time Jack was so much hers, because he had no mothers or sisters, not even any aunts, to whom he could turn. Just to her. It seemed to her that the very depth of her love would suffice her.

"Jack. . . Jack darling. . ." she murmured, but she couldn't say anything else.

She looked back at the house. . . and saw the sunset touching the windows with saffron and gold as the car swung around the bend. What would it bring, she wondered?

EXERCISE CARE IN THE USE OF DEPILATORIES

BY ALICIA HART

Superfluous hair is a problem. You simply can't leave it alone and let it grow, yet you must be extremely careful just what sort of a depilatory you choose.

If you have hair on your chin or upper lip, don't experiment with it yourself. Go to a reliable electrocician and have him remove the hairs, one at a time, with an electric needle. Be sure that he removes the root and doesn't just break the hair off in the middle. In case the hairs on your chin or lip are simply "razor," you can bleach them so that they won't show. There are any number of preparations on the market for bleaching and almost every one of them is effective.

Depilatories have vastly improved in the last few years. They are no longer difficult to use and their odors are not so offensive. There are pastes, powders, liquids and wax. Choose one which is easy to use and which does not irritate your skin. Most everyone needs to use a depilatory under the arms once a week. Superfluous hair is most unsightly and you can't expect to look your best in an evening dress if any of it shows.

Paste depilatory is spread on with a wooden spatula which comes in the package. Don't rub the skin when you apply it. Let the paste dry and then remove it with a soft cloth and warm water. If you prefer, you can gently scrape it off with the same spatula.

Powder depilatories are moistened with warm water and then applied in the same manner as the paste.

Liquids should be applied with a piece of clean cotton. Allow it to remain a few minutes and then wash the hair off with water.

The use of wax as a depilatory is rather a painful operation. You melt it and then spread it on with the back of a spoon. Leave a few little cracks here and there through the wax so that you will be able to take the edges between your thumb and forefinger when you pull it off. When the wax has hardened, grasp the edges and pull it off in the opposite direction from which the hair naturally grows. The use of wax is not a permanent cure for superfluous hair, but it will keep it from growing as fast and you don't need to use it nearly as often as you do the other depilatories.

Many people prefer to use a razor. However, you must be extremely careful not to cut yourself and you should apply an antiseptic immediately afterward.

In using all depilatories be sure that the surface is clean before you start and that you use a touch of cold cream and a talcum powder when you have finished.

MY NEIGHBOR Says —

Fudge will be smooth and creamy if one teaspoon of cornstarch is added to each cup of sugar.

Dry chamomile rubbed over highly polished furniture, which has become cloudy, streaks the surface and does not remove the blur. Chamomile wet in cold water and wrung dry will give a better polish.

A small pad of tissue paper will give a brilliant polish to mirrors, picture glasses and crystal.

Celery salt added to potato soup gives it a delicious flavor.

WE WOMEN

By Virginia Vane

WEAK FOOLISH HUSBAND NEEDS HELP AND GUIDANCE—HUSBAND SHOULD HELP SEPARATED WIFE

Dear Virginia Vane: My husband disappointed me terribly in many ways after we were married and was often mean and unsympathetic. So that nothing I could do would make us a happy couple. I therefore left him and went to my parents to teach him a lesson. That was some months ago and since that time he has given up his job and gone on a lot of sprees, having as much of a good time as he possibly can. He keeps begging me to come back but shows no signs of repentance and my family feel that I ought to stay here until he agrees to reform—or else leave him for good. I still love him.

H. A.

Your lesson seems to have had some effect on the young man, anyway. It's driven him into excesses of all sorts which may be his way of showing that he's been badly upset by your departure. It's just possible that the most salutary thing in the world would be for you to return to him.

As it is, neither of you are really happy. He presumably isn't enjoying himself as thoroughly as he pretends, or he wouldn't keep urging you to come back. You're miserable, in your parents' home, knowing that your husband still needs you and that he is committing all sorts of folly in your absence.

If he's a weak character—and he seems to be—then he needs your love and sympathy and there is a fairly good chance that this lesson although it's had a bad temporary effect, may start him off the right way when you go back to him again.

Obviously you have forgiven him, and in spite of what your parents say, I believe that the only hope for your happiness and his is for you to go back. You must, of course stipulate that he be able to support you before you return to him. There's no point in rejoicing him only to find that he can't afford to keep you.

FRANCES. Your case sounds somewhat the same as that of H. A. but actually your husband is a very different sort of character from the weak foolish boy H. A. describes. He apparently has no intention of realizing his responsibility toward you, since he has never asked you to come back to him and has never ceased to enjoy life from the moment you left.

It isn't fair to your family that you should go on living there with your child for an indefinite period of time. They have financial problems of their own, and the financial burden is made heavier by the expense of your impending motherhood. Therefore it would seem best to take legal action if you are to keep up your end of the expenses in your present home. You can certainly claim support from him and you are entitled to do this. Would advise immediate action, since you have given your husband every opportunity to act fairly.

May Prove Blessing in Disguise D. M.: What looks like a cruel stroke of Fate may have been the best of breaks for you, young man. You know you couldn't go on being in love with a married woman. You know the affair had to end some day. And you're lucky that it didn't end in a worse mess than this.

Now at least there will be no ugly scenes—no reproachful words. You're well out of it, and you ought to be extremely grateful for your deliverance. Her part in the affair was no worse than yours, so if I were you, I wouldn't go around feeling vindictive and badly used. If this episode in your life has taught you to stay out of unsavory entanglements such as you describe, you will be a wiser man. Prescribed for over 30 years, for every pain of nerve and muscle.

HIGH SCHOOL GRID PLAYERS ROTARY GUESTS

Twin City Football Teams Hear Talks by Professional Stars

Menasha—Three Twin City high school football teams, Neenah, Menasha and St. Mary's, with their coaches, were feted at a joint banquet meeting of the Menasha and Neenah Rotary clubs at Hotel Menasha Wednesday evening. About 100 were in attendance.

Vernie Lewellyn, star backfield man with the Green Bay Packers, was the principal speaker. Lewellyn told high school griders how the professional football players enjoyed playing the game and played to win. He suggested that each player study the rule book carefully, explaining that griders versed in the regulations of the game are more valuable individually and collectively.

Frank "Jugger" Earpe, former Monmouth star and center for the Packers team, spoke briefly on the work of a team's pivot man and amused the high school players by pointing out how little could be accomplished by a backfield man if the center refused to give him the ball. Red Dunn, Packers quarter back and former Marquette star, also spoke on the work in his position on a team.

The meeting was opened by I. H. Clough, Menasha Rotary president, and after a short talk by F. S. Durham, Neenah Rotary president, the program was turned over to F. E. Sensenbrenner, toastmaster.

The three coaches in attendance, Ole Jorgenson of Neenah, Nathan Calder of Menasha and Clifford Dilts of St. Mary's of Menasha, each introduced the players on his team.

John Holzman, Neenah high school principal, J. E. Kitorski, Menasha superintendent of schools and the Rev. J. The banquet is an annual event staged by the two Rotary organizations.

LITTLE BROWN JUG, NOTED GRID TROPHY, LOST AT ANN ARBOR

Ann Arbor, Mich.—(AP)—The Little Brown Jug, prized University of Michigan football trophy, and the victor's award in Michigan-Minnesota football games for 28 years, still is A. W. O. L.

Students who believed the jug found last night after a frenzied search received a shock this morning when Franklin Cappon, of the Michigan coaching staff, pronounced the find a rank imitation.

"This," said Cappon, viewing yesterday's find, "is just another jug. It's not the jug."

The jug found last night was painted to resemble the original, but was crudely done. And so the search was on again. The jug has never missed its place on the sidelines of a Michigan-Minnesota game in 28 years—and the Minnesota game in Nov. 21 this year.

Students believe some sort of a dark plot is underfoot. Sheriff Jacob B. Andrews of Washtenaw-co has been asked to aid in the search. So far the sheriff hasn't sworn in any extra deputies.

The deep "low" which was centered over western Lake Superior yesterday has decreased in intensity and remained practically stationary, and now overlies the state of Wisconsin. It has caused unsettled weather over the northern and northeastern parts of the country and light rain over the upper Mississippi and Missouri Valleys and the lake region. This disturbance is followed by high pressure over the northern Rocky Mountains which is bringing fair weather to all sections from the plains states westward. Rain mixed with snow is expected in this section tonight and Friday, with continued cold.

DON'T DISARM, FORMER LEGION LEADER PLEADS

Reduction of Armed Forces Won't End Wars, Col. Roy Farrand Holds

"With all Europe on armed camp, with potential enemies brought thousands of miles nearer our shores by the increase in transportation facilities, and with the United States holding a position in the world that makes it peculiarly the object of envy and greed and misunderstanding what is posterity going to think of us if we fail them by placing our dependence upon leagues and treaties and throw into disarray that clause of the preamble of the Constitution which enjoins us to provide for the national defense?" questioned Col. Roy F. Farrand, president of St. John Military academy at Delafield, in his address, "Why Disarm?" at the seventy-first anniversary dinner of the Episcopal church Wednesday evening.

Dispelling any erroneous impression that he might be making a brief for war, the former Wisconsin commander of the American Legion declared that he was not in favor of more disarmament than the Chicago gangs can be brought into harmony by depriving them of their machine guns.

"You can no more end war by reducing our armed forces than you can end fires by cutting down your fire department," he asserted. With the statement that down through the ages, since 476 B. C., there has been written in flaming letters across the pages of history the fact that the nation which no longer is able to protect itself from attack or invasion will surely fall, he pointed out the two periods in a cycle of history when one hears much talk against a proper preparation for national defense.

Mentions Two Periods

One, he said, is immediately after a devastating war, when people's hearts are sick with the horror of what they have so recently experienced and when they are ready to follow any chimera that will promise to lead them away from the danger of a repetition of that experience. The second is when the generation which has experienced the war has passed away, and the succeeding generation, lulled by the false sense of security which years of peace have engendered, is unable to realize the possibility of war, or to appreciate the terrible suddenness with which it can spring upon them. It was this latter situation which prevailed in this country prior to 1917, he stated, and the former which exists now.

He spoke of eras in history when this statement was proved, of the period following the Crimean war and the European wars which succeeded it, and of the conditions and attitudes of mind that existed in 1914.

"I think there is no more logical conclusion than that if England had been prepared there would have been no World War in 1914," he said. "Certainly if England in that year had been able to throw millions of trained and equipped men into Belgium as she did in 1916, there never would have occurred that pitiful and heroic retreat from Mons, that stretched line of trenches from the North Sea to the Swiss border, that horror of unrestricted submarine warfare. There never would have been a declaration of war between the United States and the Central Powers."

Roosevelt's Advice

"If we had listened to the council of Theodore Roosevelt had had an efficient army to back up an efficient naval force, it never would have been necessary to sacrifice almost a quarter of a million men in killed and wounded, and untold billions of capital, to convince the enemy that we were after all a power to be reckoned with."

And today, he said, with unrest in Europe, conditions as they are in China and Japan, India aroused by its warring struggles, America thinks it sees a glimpse of the dawn of an era of peace, and sincere men and women are so bedazzled by the contemplation of such a possibility that they are blind to facts and deaf to logic.

Applauding treaties but warning against too much faith in them, Col. Farrand said that he is in sympathy with every reasonable device that has been thus far suggested to promote peaceful adjustment of dispute between nations. He saw no reason why, with satisfactory reservations, the United States should not have entered the League of Nations, or the World Court, and he lauded the Kellogg treaties.

"I see no reason, however, why we should enter upon such experiments at the expense of the only proven method of preserving our integrity—preparing military preparedness," he remarked. "Until the emergency arises it is difficult to say if these treaties will work, and I think there is a danger that they may lull us into a false sense of security."

Treaties Are Violated

Reminding his listeners that treaties in the past have been violated, that in 1914 Belgium was protected by a solemn treaty, the speaker referred to the Kellogg treaties as "a noble experiment," like the Eighteenth amendment.

"They are like the aeronautical inventor who has such an abiding faith in his new model airplane that he is willing to risk a trial flight without the customary parachute," he averred.

It was not Germany's preparedness that threw her into war, but the false philosophy of that country during two generations, he maintained. On the other hand he expressed the opinion that it was Switzerland's military system and universal military training and service that kept Germany from attempting to enter the little republic.

He exploded the theory that military training promotes the war spirit, declaring that after boys have been subjected to years of military training they get out of "fed up" on it, because the romance has been taken out of it, because it has been made so commonplace its power to attract has been destroyed.

"Do not forget, my friends, that when war comes it comes suddenly," he, warned. "It is as logical to prepare for war after war has come, as it is to organize the fire department after your city is in the clutches of fire. Do not forget that America's splendid showing in the world war would never have been possible, had not fortuitous circumstances given us strong allies to hold at a distance the trained armies of our enemies for more than 12 long months after our entrance into the conflict, before we were ready to place troops in the battle lines. It was 15 months before we had a complete army in the field."

U. S. Unprepared Then

He drew a picture of the lack of equipment and training when the United States entered the World war, concluding with, "If that is the price we paid when we were presumably armed, God pity us when we are disarmed, if our treaties fail!"

In short speeches Mayor John Goodland, Jr. spoke of the city of Appleton and its future, Bishop Harwood Sturtevant of the activities of the parish and the credit which is due the laymen, and Mrs. Luther Moore of the work of the women of the parish. Dr. L. D. Utts, rector, announced the services for the remainder of the week, which include Holy Communion services on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and the confirmation of a class on Sunday. C. C. Baker was toastmaster, and the Rev. H. S. Stanton of Sheboygan Falls delivered the invocation. The Rev. E. J. Fitzpatrick of Plymouth was a guest. Letters from former rectors were read at the dinner.

About 150 attended the anniversary dinner, which was served in a dining room elaborately decorated with autumn colors, pumpkins and candles by a committee made up of Mrs. H. F. Benke, M. T. Ray, Mrs. L. L. Alsted and Mrs. Moore.

INSTALL NEW HEATING SYSTEM IN WAREHOUSE

A new heating system extension is being installed in the warehouse and garage of the city pumping station and filtration plant. The extension runs from the pumping station to the warehouse under the new plant aerator. The work will be completed this week.

Frederic March Plays Dual Role As Jekyll And Hyde

BY JESSIE HENDERSON
Copyright, 1931, By Cons. Press
Hollywood —(CPA)— It ought to take Frederic March some time to get his face back into shape after twisting it hither and yon in his lately finished work as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Yet his face looked all right today, though the muscles of his jaw must have ached.

March has been making faces at the camera for several weeks. Every time he made a worse one than before, Director Rouben Mamoulian called for a worse one yet. And March produced it. The outcome is that his final appearance as Mr. Hyde is enough to make chills run up and down the spine of a polar bear.

Mamoulian and March worked out seven different characterizations for the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde film. There are four Jekylls and three Hydes. Which means that a couple dozen other characterizations were tried before these seven were decided upon.

When Mr. Hyde of Frederic March first appears he is not a full fledged villain. As the picture progresses, Hyde becomes physically more terrible and at the same time Dr. Jekyll, in trying to conquer his evil self, grows more and more exhausted by the battle.

It was necessary to have the seven characterizations both different and distinct. Dr. Jekyll must never in his struggle look too much like Mr. Hyde and Mr. Hyde in his family must never look too much like Dr. Jekyll, yet each must decidedly resemble the other. Try it sometime on your mirror, which is what March did.

URGES ADVERTISING TO RELEASE BUYING POWER

Madison —(P)— Effective and voluminous advertising that will release the stored-up buying power of the consumer will aid in dispersing the business depression, C. C. Younggreen, Milwaukee, said in a speech here today.

"Savings deposits in the past two years have been increasing more than 50 per cent faster than is normal and today there is more than 28 billions of idle purchasing power lying in the savings banks of the United States," he said.

"There are millions of men and women whose incomes are beyond their immediate needs and who have been saving so much during the past two years that the savings banks are embarrassed with an over-supply of money," he said.

NEW PROPOSAL ADVANCED AT BANK HEARING

Suggestion Made for Separating Two Wisconsin State Bodies

Madison —(P)— The legislative interim committee on banking had a new proposal to think over today—the separation of the securities division from the public service commission and the naming of a qualifying board to guide country bankers in making security investments.

The committee can out of speakers yesterday afternoon and ended its last public hearing on proposed changes in the banking laws. It will hold executive sessions until the first of next week when its report to the special session of the legislature probably will be completed.

One of the last things impressed upon the committee was that the small country banker needs assistance in investing his bank's funds in bonds and securities, a field in which he is none too well informed.

R. B. Wood, an official of the Adams County State bank, proposed the organization of a board which could be tied up with the securities division, and which would have to approve the bond investments of banks. He suggested that the securities division be made a department separate from the Public Service commission.

"The average country banker has had no experience investing in securities," Wood said, "and there have been high pressure salesmen out in the counties selling all kinds of bonds, good, bad and indifferent."

Another speaker, H. W. Bolens of Port Washington, formerly in the banking business, wanted to know why the banks "can't loan to the farmers instead of buying bonds they know nothing about."

He criticized the limits of 90-day credit and invited anybody in the room to give him a definition of a "frozen asset" which he, himself, described as merely a term that originated with the federal banking department and came to be applied to farm mortgages.

Need Farm Mortgages
"We were forced to get rid of our farm mortgages," he said. "We bought government bonds and saw them go down to 85, while the good old farm mortgages of Ozaukee were paid 100 cents on the dollar. When we get back to the point in the state where a bank can take a farm mortgage we'll get back to prosperity. It's get away from this 90-day stuff."

The suggestions had important bearing on the proposal to require banks to set aside 20 per cent of their deposits in secondary reserves that might be immediately realized upon for the protection of depositors.

With but one exception none of the final speakers voiced any opposition to chain banks. The one who did doubted whether the legislature has the constitutional right to restrict group banking by refusing the chains deposits of public moneys and membership in proposed regional clearing house associations. He was R. B. Rowley, Madison legal advisor.

Bolens declared that "unwarranted fear" developed the term "frozen assets" and was responsible for agitation against chain banks.

"When Bankshares was organized," he said, "that aroused fear among the bankers. The bankers passed on the fear to the vote-getters and the vote-getters stirred up the people."

Riley S. Young of Darien, Wis.,

worth-ee banker, said that the group bank system proved to be the small banker's best friend by assisting him in handling his bond investment problem.

A. B. Kenney, president of the Waunakee State bank, told the committee that his experience with group bank secured him of some of his original opposition to them but said he thought it would be alright to restrict the chains to their present size.

WISCONSIN WORKS ON GOPHER PLAYS

Buckets Goldenberg Returns Wearing Mask Over His Penn Wounds

Madison—(P)—The Badgers got a taste of what Minnesota is likely to offer in the way of an offense when the freshmen ran off Gopher plays in scrimmage yesterday.

Wearing the maroon and gold yesterday of Minnesota, the frosh opened up with everything the scouts brought back from Minneapolis last weekend. The lighter and less experienced freshmen did not make much headway, but Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite seemed far from satisfied with the Badgers' defense.

Coach Thistlethwaite gave particular attention to the second defense Jim Wimmer played quarterback and Joe Linfor and Walter McGuire worked at the halves. Schneller held down the fullback post.

Buckets Goldenberg returned to uniform and some scrimmage with the reserves but he was forced to wear a cumbersome mask to cover the cuts received in the Penn game. The blocking quarterback is expected to be only in an emergency Doug Simmons, scrappy center, was in injured yesterday and his playing Saturday is problematical.

My Ubl and Ken McDougall, the main spurs in the Gopher backfield, were spotted by the Badgers as the freshmen went through the Minnesota plays and Coach Thistlethwaite and his aides at tempted to accurately depict the pair's duties in the northerners' running and passing game.

A good spurt elicited in the Badger camp yesterday. It was not one of overconfidence. The Penn setback apparently was effective in showing that a victory over Purdue will not win the other games on the schedule.

ARMY BURIES ITS FOOTBALL DEAD IN "POINT" CEMETERY

Impressive Ceremony Marks Last Tribute to Cadet Sheridan

BY EDWARD J. NEIL
Associated Press Sports Writer
WEST POINT, N. Y. (P)—Army turned its back on tragedy today, tried to forget for the moment the fresh grave of Cadet Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Jr., and thought only of the Army code, "carry on."

On the bulletin boards was the official announcement: "Army begins today intensive practice for the football game Saturday with Colorado college."

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, father and mother of the Army end who died of a broken neck suffered in gridiron battle with Yale, together with another son, Gerard, and a daughter, Mrs. J. L. Herman, were on their way back home by train to Augusta, Ga.

In the Army records, across the name of "Dick" Sheridan, president of the second year class, honor man and soldier, was written: "Died of injuries accidentally received."

The corps rallied yesterday to give their comrade a military burial that for dignity, impressiveness and depth of feeling has been surpassed in West Point history. In full dress shouldering their rifles, they guarded him in honor as he lay through the day in the tiny Catholic chapel on a knoll overlooking the Hudson.

His Catholic comrades went to a last requiem mass with him there in the morning and in the afternoon his classmates, the football squad, relatives, officers and Yale mourners, Captain Able Booth and Head Coach Mal Stevens, attended the solemn burial services in the chapel. Then in the late afternoon the entire corps, military band at the head beating out the measured tread of a funeral march, led a majestic way for him to the cemetery.

Behind the flag-draped casket, resting on an artillery caisson drawn by seven horses, plodded a cavalry horse draped in black, Sheridan's boots set backward in the stirrups, ahead walked the priest in his cassock and robes, behind trudged the mourners, he was lowered into his grave as the priest prayed again, his company there three volleys and the post bugler sounded "Taps."

The corps turned then and marched on to the gathering darkness down the long hill to the barracks while the band swung into a blithe marching tune. Sheridan was behind them, and the Army has to move forward.

Optimism?
EVIDENTLY Madison Square Garden is of the opinion that boxing and other public hall business will earn at least $45,000 profit during the next three years. That sum at the rate of $15,000 a year, is what the Garden is paying James J. Johnston, former Boy Bandit of Broadway, to conduct its athletic affairs.

Scholarly Perils
Dr. H. Marx White professor of medicine at the University of Minnesota, the other day remarked that college youths, recklessly exerting themselves in competitive sports for the glory of dear old Whoozies, may cause themselves great bodily harm. But then, doctor, a person could fall out of a window in the library, too, you know.

Prosperity
It was estimated that all the way from 500 to 2000 Texans good and true made the long trip from Texas to see the football team play in Harvard Stadium. You might say that was a benefit game for the railroads.

Dallas to Annapolis
Southern Methodist University players get around over the country a bit, too. They play the Navy at Annapolis and go to the other coast in December to meet St. Mary's.

Yanks Building
With the arrival of Frank C. Osetti, the sensational Pacific Coast League serve as a warning to future opponents that it means to go through the season unbeaten. Six touchdowns is four more than the team scored in any previous game, indicating that the big fellows have improved their offense.

Four of the other leading teams held their place right below the top-notchers by winning or tying in the last series. West De Pere high, which was held to a 6 to 6 tie by New London, now has Campy in second place, as Oconto Falls, Sturgeon Bay and Kaukauna moved ahead by winning from Oconto, 19 to 0, from Two Rivers, 40 to 6, and from De Pere, 20 to 6, respectively. Oconto, a third place team last week, was the only one of the pennant contenders that slipped a cog, dropping to seventh place.

Games Follow Dope
Results of the last games were much as forecast. Except in the Oconto Falls Oconto game. The Oconto team ran into mud for a second time this fall, and was ineffective without a chance to apply its passing attack.

Will Sturgeon Bay be able to stop Menasha Friday night at Menasha is the question uppermost in the minds of the fans who follow the league's affairs. On a dry field the game should prove to be close, with the Menasha eleven matching its powerful, driving plays and occasional passes against the speedy ground plays and aerial attack of Sturgeon Bay.

Oconto Falls at De Pere
One other game will be played Friday, that between Oconto Falls and De Pere at De Pere, with the Falls looking like the winner on its recent victories, and the fact that De Pere lost its quarterback, Harold Schumacher, for the season.

Interesting competition is promised in Saturday's contests. West High and Oconto, old rivals, will battle at Oconto, Kewaunee and Algoma will resume their neighborhood wars at Algoma. Neenah will invade Shawano for a severe test, and Two Rivers will try to win its first conference game at the expense of Kaukauna high. New London plays a non-conference game with Clintonville.

CANZONERI DEFENDS JUNIOR WELTER TITLE

Newark, N. J. (P)—Tony Canzoneri of New York, holder of two world's boxing championships, defended the lesser of his titles, the junior welter championship, by knocking out Phil Griffin of Newark in a ten round bout at the Newark arena tonight. In addition to the 140 pound crown he won from Jackie Kid Berg, Canzoneri holds the lightweight championship.

Griffin, whose reputation depends principally on local triumphs, is not expected to provide much serious opposition for the champion. To make sure that it would be a title bout, the New Jersey state athletic commission subjected Griffin to a special weighing yesterday and found him well under the limit at 133 pounds.

PURDUE THROWS ITS GREATEST STRENGTH AGAINST CHICAGO

Bob Zupke to Use More Veterans Against Northwestern Eleven

BY WILLIAM WEEKES
Associated Press Sports Writer
CHICAGO (P)—Saturday promises to be the worst of Saturdays for Chicago Maroons. Upset by Wisconsin in their first Big Ten game of the season, which meant virtual elimination from the championship race, the Bollermakers now figure some consolation may be gained by outscoring other opponents by as great margins as possible. Also, they yearn to give the Maroons a larger beating than their neighbor, Indiana, did last week. The Hoosiers made up for previous failures against Chicago by winning, 32 to 6.

Purdue's forces think they will be able to smash Chicago around even more severely than the Bollermakers of 1928, who turned in a 40 to 0 triumph. For the first time of the season, Purdue has all its manpower ready, while Chicago, feeble enough at the start of the campaign, will lack three of its best, Stanley Hamberg, guard; Pete Zimmer, fullback, and Don Birney, halfback.

Badgers Replace Losses
Wisconsin is busy making last minute alterations to replace losses, in time to give Minnesota a tussle. Jim Wimmer probably will start at quarter in place of Buckets Goldenberg, who was injured in the Pennsylvania game, and Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite is trying to locate a starter for Walter McGuire, the Huskies' halfback. The latter is unable to play. The Badgers fear Minnesota's passing game and have worked against aerials all week. The Gophers, in better shape than ever, are smoothing up their offense.

There may be more veterans in the Illinois lineup Saturday against Northwestern. Bob Zupke's sophomore have failed to show speed enough to handle their formations and several letter winners from last season, have been moved up to the first squad. The Wildcats were given another scrimmage yesterday to shake out any traces of overconfidence, and will have all hands, with the exception of Harold Weldin, center, and Bob Russell, fullback, ready for the contest. With Olson at full, and Al Moore at half in place of Ken Meenan.

Hoosiers vs. Ohio
Indiana is planning an offensive battle against Ohio State with pass as predominating. The Buckeyes, however, in addition to smoothing their defense against passes, have prepared two backfields to alternate against the Hoosiers, and plan to stick to the powerhouse attack.

Coach Burt Ingwersen of Iowa, has moved Moore and Pickering, a pair of sophomores, into his regular line, and with Joe Laws, the southpaw passer, continuing to show sensational form in practice, the Hawk eyes are confident of defeating George Washington university Saturday.

Michigan and Notre Dame were scheduled to head east today to meet Princeton and Carnegie Tech, respectively. Bill Hewitt is certain to start at fullback for the Wolverines, leaving Captain Roy Hudson and Jack Heston to share a halfback job. Coach Hunk Anderson had named three complete teams to work against the Skibos Saturday.

BASEBALL LEADERS HONOR COMISKEY

Simple Funeral Attended by Largest Crowd in Chicago History

Chicago (P)—Baseball's leaders came to Chicago today to bid a final farewell to Charles Albert Comiskey, owner of the White Sox. Funeral plans called for extreme simplicity, but it was expected to be one of the largest in Chicago's history. Not only were notables of the sport to attend, but the huge number of friends of the "Old Roman" gathered to pay their respects.

The active pallbearers were Patrick Nash, Urban Faber, John P. Harding, Ed Fleming, Judge Henry Horner, Joseph T. Barry, Jesse Matson and William J. Leahy. Ken Casaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, John A. Heydler, president of the National League, and William Harbridge, president of the American League, which Comiskey helped organize, headed the list of baseball powers, and presidents of other major league clubs were to attend the services.

The latter included Bob Quinn, president of the Boston Red Sox, L. E. McAvoy, vice president of the St. Louis Browns, Clark Griffith, president of the Washington club, Alva Bradley, president of the Cleveland Indians, and Frank J. Navin, president of the Detroit club, and vice president of the American League Phil Ball of St. Louis, John Shibe of the Philadelphia Athletics, and Col Jacob Ruppert, president of the New York Yankees, were ill and could not attend. Connie Mack was to represent Shibe.

Wildcat Backs Are Steady, Unaffected Group Of Boys

BY FRANCIS J. POWERS
Copyright 1931
CHICAGO (CPA)—Northwestern university's gigantic backfield—Rentner, Potter, Meenan and Olson or Russell—may not be the greatest offensive combination in the history of football, but it certainly is one of the most insouciant. No oratory—not even that of a Burke, Webster or Cal houn—could arouse those young men into the hysterical frenzy of football fiction and you will never read of the Purple backs coming onto a field in tears, ready to die for dear old alma mater. The lads would rather live and play football another day.

To them football is a hard as the occasion demands and without any stimulus other than that generated naturally by the heat of combat. Richard Hanley gets no practice for post-prandial declamations from those five.

Ernest (Pug) Rentner, a blond junior from Joliet, Ill., is the most unconcerned of the quintet. Rentner understood a vast store of reticence from the German forerunners and speech of five words is a Ciceronian effort for the greatest halfback of the Big Ten season. Rentner does little to attract attention during practices. He goes through the drills industriously but always with an air of extreme boredom and the appearance of a rag doll about to fall apart. Only when called on to block, in scrimmage, does Rentner come to life and then he punishes scrubs and freshmen with ferocity.

Unlike many backs, Pug enjoys blocking and it's his liking for that, brusing part of the game that is responsible for many a Northwestern gain. No back ever can say Rentner did not block for him. But once the whistle blows for him into action Rentner is galvanized into a whirlwind of power. He is the best all-around runner in the Western conference, the best forward passer and the best defensive back. His defense against forward passes astonishes every scout. Here's the answer. Pug is a one-man track team. He can run the century in ten seconds, has done 5 feet 3 inches in the high jump and is a fine low hurdler. (In addition he puts the shot and throws the javelin well and may be a candidate for the decathlon in the 1936 Olympiad. His speed and jumping ability are great assets for pass defense. And he has uncanny skill in diagnosing plays and following the ball.

A Social Bust
Dick Hanley never worries about Rentner breaking training rules. Pug is a social bust among the Northwestern coeds and his amusements are simple. The night of Northwestern-Nebraska game the writer found Pug sitting among the cowhands at a rodeo being staged in the Chicago Stadium. He wanted to learn if Red Russell had been on the level with his tall stories of bucking broncos. You occasionally find Rentner at Evanston's one motion picture palace but never at the Purple.

Rentner has one habit that gives Dick Hanley chills. There's a five-foot woven wire fence bounding one end of Northwestern's practice field, and every evening when the workout is finished Pug always jumps that barrier on his way to the dressing rooms.

Although only a sophomore, George Potter has all the mental calmness of a Friedman or a Cardo. He makes mistakes, but they are the errors of inexperience and not of nervousness. Conservatism has been his chief fault all season, and he likes uncovering pet-scoring plays until everything else is exhausted. Potter is the absolute boss of the Wildcats on the field and he rules it like a Prussian field marshal. This year Northwestern is one of the fastest of midwestern teams in getting out of a huddle.

Reb Russell is too old a campaigner to be worried about any possibilities and the rebel believes he can master probabilities. A strain of Cherokee Indian blood has leavened the more volatile Irish portion of Russell's makeup without detracting from his fighting spirit. Russell abhors easy football games. Give him a Notre Dame or Ohio State every Saturday and he would be happy for he likes to smash those big heavy lines where the going always is tough.

Ken Meenan is very phlegmatic for an Irishman and Oliver Olson—well whoever heard of Oliver Olson?—Meenan's forte is blocking and backing up the line. Six feet 3 and 139 pounds, Kenneth is a real colossus as he stands close behind the Purple line of defense. Still he is very fast and a good ball carrier. Olson is one of the very best punters to show in the Big Ten since Harry Kipke's playing days at Michigan.

DREYFUSS SEEKS NEW MANAGER FOR PIRATES
New York (P)—Barney Dreyfuss, owner of the Pittsburgh Pirates, is thoroughly non-committal about who may manage his team next season although his present trip to New York supposedly is concerned with shipping a new pilot. Several men are available for the job, he says, and he intends to look over the eligibles before reaching a decision, Victors in two games, tied in two and defeated in one the Orange hopes to add another win Saturday. Oshkosh has been defeated several times this fall and unless the Orange hands another trimming, Appleton prestige will suffer.

Oshkosh is accommodating Appleton fans in coming here Saturday for originally the game was scheduled at the Bayview city field. However, Appleton, because it was forced to play away from home so often, succeeded in getting Oshkosh to bring the game here. The gate will be split.

Orange gridlers all except to be in good shape for Saturday, even Mortell and Peotter who have been nursing injured knees. Braces have been secured for both boys so the old injury will not be aggravated.

Scoring statistics for the Valley conference show East Green Bay with the best record. The Red Devils have counted 114 points and allowed but 19, thirteen of which were picked up by Appleton. West Green Bay is second with 91 points scored and 33 scored against it. Appleton follows with 82 in its favor and 44 against.

"Old Roman" Opposed Big Major League Ball Squads

BY JOHN B. FOSTER
Copyright, 1931
NEW YORK—(CPA)—Those in the major leagues who favor slicing down the player limit have lost one of their greatest champions in the death of Charles A. Comiskey, owner of the Chicago White Sox.

It was his theory that too much man power is tied up by each major league club for the needs of the club or the good of baseball.

"We are trying to make stars to order," he said just before his death. "We engage 40 ball players when we don't need 25 and we send a surplus around to be brought by some other man. How do we know how they are being brought up? How do we know that we are going to get any baseball out of them when we shift the players around to so many minor league organizations. They take it easy because they expect to go back to major league clubs. I've gotten that kind of report about them more than once. They try to tell me that primary school course which was arranged for them."

Once the New York American league club wished to increase the player limit in the majors to 50 men instead of 40, as it is now.

"Won't do," said Comiskey. "Makes that many more dromes. Colonel Ruppert means well enough. He wants to have ball players by the score that he can call upon to keep the strength of his team. I'd have the same chance. But I wouldn't get results. I'd just be tying up that much more material which could amount to something if the kids got out and played baseball on their own account instead of thinking that they were settled down, just waiting to get back to Chicago and the south side."

Comiskey openly advocated that the major limit in players should be reduced to 25. "You'd have better baseball," he said, "inside of a year. The competition wouldn't be on the part of the club owners to get players but on the part of the players to make good and get jobs."

He was not in favor of the so called chain store system. "Some day there will be a mess. Some club will accuse another of treading on its toes. The row will go back to the majors who shouldn't have any more to say about minor leagues than the minors have to say about the majors. All there is to any relations between major and minor leagues is to treat the little league right. Keep hands off their players and encourage them to become independent of subsidies."

MORE STUDENTS TAKE COURSES IN BUSINESS

Depression Has Brought Change in Trend of Studies in Schools

BY LOUIS E. VAN NORMAN
Copyright, 1931, By Cons. Press
Washington—(CFA)—An increasing turn toward business careers on the part of college students, both young men and young women is noticeable in the registration at schools throughout the country. A survey of registration made by the national educational authorities show a very noticeable turn toward courses in business since the depression began. There is increased interest shown in vocational courses, which train the student for a job.

This trend to business careers is accompanied by a marked decrease in the number of students registering for the sciences, the strictly cultural arts, theology and other highly specialized studies. At the same time, education in universities and colleges seem to be attracting more students and teachers colleges are filling up rapidly.

This tendency is important to business in other ways, notably from the consumer angle, a direct relationship between the student and the purchasing power has been traced by the United States Commissioner of Education.

More Purchases
He points out that states which rank highest in education also take the lead in per capita wealth and show greater per capita purchasing power. This, he believes, is the direct outcome of a better understanding between college men and women and business, as well as the result of a higher standard of living. Indeed, this higher standard of living and increase in economic activity is reflected in the per capita purchases through retail stores as shown by department of commerce figures. Naturally, in these purchases, books, newspapers and other periodicals enjoy a much greater demand among people of higher education.

Following out this idea and in an endeavor to capitalize this ever broadening flow of college students into business, several large department stores in western cities are reported by department of commerce trade investigators to have established "college boards" in these boards give help and advice to students who are planning to enter business. They advise students, particularly young women, with regard to their wardrobe and general equipment. With this end in view, these boards begin to cultivate the future "to-ads" while she is still a senior in high school. The manager of one of these department stores put it this way: "Bring up a customer in the way she should go and, when she grows older, she will not depart from you."

Gets Advice
Beginning with the girl's last year in high school, she is advised by a representative of the store, who is usually one of her fellow students, with regard to business methods. This representative also keeps the store in active contact with condi-

Human Side Of A Genius

Why Thomas A. Edison Was Unique Among America's Immortals
By Lemuel F. Parton

Copyright, 1931, by the Appleton Post-Crescent
Chapter V.

The bright, burnished market-ticker of today, purring busily but not always happily under its glass dome, bears the brass label, "M.T.D. by T. A. Edison, Inc." The youth in the rumpled suit, sleeping on the pile of newspapers, wasn't incorporated then and the ticker men did not even know him as T. A. Edison, until a few days later. The gold corner had started the stock exchange doing a horn pipe and the primitive ticker of the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company was getting winded, trying to keep up with the day and night, with occasional rests on his newspaper couch, the still nameless and unincorporated youth had hovered over the instrument, and when, nobody was looking, ran his sensitive fingers over the mechanism.

This went on for about a week, and then, when the market was booming, the thing broke down. Officials of the telegraph company, in broadcloth frock coats, with goose creases on their boots, stood about helplessly, summoning worried technicians and trying to round up the men who made it. Tinkering and imprecations failed. It didn't come from this young chap who had been hanging around the last week.

Edison mildly addressed the exasperated mechanic then occupied with the thing's insides. "You got her hooked up wrong here," he said, "rig her with this racket over here, like this." He was making some deft rearrangement of the complicated gears as he spoke. "You see—"

He was interrupted by a busy whirling and clicking. The princess had awakened at the touch of the prince crashing the hedge of the thorns—pick your own miracle—and life stirred again in the temple of gold.

Three Hundred A Month
"Who are you?" said the big boss of the office, an imposing man with a celluloid dickie and a diamond horseshoe in his cravat.

"I am Thomas A. Edison," said the grinning lad with the shiny alpaca pants and one suspender, there-tions in the school and aids in building up valuable goods will at a time when the customer is most receptive. Advertising campaigns follow and, when the young woman enters college, she is a well-informed customer.

Another store is reported to have followed this matter into the colleges and appointed "style advisers" to help in selecting the sort of apparel that is most appropriate and popular. Through advertisements, the college students are informed as to the merchandise most suited to their needs. Local ideas and preferences are carefully observed.

by etching the name on something more durable than curb-ticker's brass plate.

They made him office superintendent at $300 a month. He moved over to Newark, N. J., got a nice, clean comfortable room and immediately littered it up with nuts and bolts, alarm clock viscera, copper wire, sulphuric acid and the like. But the whining of those tickers was to him the music of the spheres, and in partnership with Franklin L. Pope, he worked earnestly to perfect and improve them.

The next year the new rig was ready for trial. It made the old ticker look like a one-legged man in a track meet.

"How much do you want for it?" said the brusque General Lefferts. Edison later said he had intended to ask $5,000 but did not have the courage. He was trying to pump up resolution to ask $3,000 when General Lefferts spoke.

"Will you take $40,000?" he asked. Edison would. When the pay-off came, there were no large bills available and he went home to Newark that night unpolished with one-dollar bills. It was not until six years later that Edison learned how to write a check. It has been said that he hid the money somewhere around his room, but there is nothing authentic about this. Another account is that Pope took care of it for him.

A Factory and Laboratory
The first expenditures—even before Tom got a new suit—went to a little factory and laboratory in Newark. Forty thousand dollars was a tidy bit of money then but Edison's friends of those days said he didn't seem to know or care how much he had. He was deep in studies of the telegraph, automatic, duplex, quadruplex, sextuplex and multiplex telegraph systems—parrain paper, carbon rheostat and micro-tasimeter. The succeeding years were prolific in patents. The quadruplex system of telegraphy was one of his greatest achievements and saved to the industry millions of dollars.

In 1876, Edison established a little laboratory in Menlo Park, N. J. His inventions had brought him fortune sufficient to make it possible for him to forget about money—which he did easily, as he plunged into his lifetime agenda of unsolved problems. Old John Kruesi, a faithful German and a good technician, was his assistant. Edison liked to fool with toys and would chuckle happily over some ingenious little thing.

Old John used to frown at this at first, disapproving of such foolishness, but soon he learned that some of Edison's greatest inspirations came from just such trifling. He was never tense, never wrought up when he was incubating an idea. Some of his best "hunches" came from "just monkeying around." Old John had occasion to remember one day when he watched his chief blowing through a little toy megaphone and sending a tiny figure scurrying around a circuit. In fact, the whole world might well mark this day.

"SINUS TROUBLE" IS OLD DISEASE WITH NEW NAME

Many Years Ago Same Aches and Pains Were Known as Common Colds

Madison — "Sinus trouble" is a very old disease that attracts widespread interest because of its new name and new methods of treatment. Many years ago the aches and pains in the forehead and cheeks were considered one of the distressing symptoms of a "common cold." Today these same symptoms are called "sinus troubles." Annually at this season of the year, changes in climate seem to be conducive to the disease among many Wisconsin people. In hot climates, like the American southwest, the disease is practically unknown among native residents.

"Presumably, statistics compiled on the number of cases of sinusitis for the past ten years would show an enormous increase over those of previous decades," declares the Educational Committee of the State Medical Society in a bulletin issued today. "Two reasons account for this: first, the more careful recording and reporting of morbid conditions; second, the fact that unquestionably sinusitis is correctly diagnosed many more times than was true even a short time ago. Two important aids in diagnosing this condition, the X-ray and transillumination, are comparatively recent; more recent still is the great advance in their technique."

"Sinusitis is usually due to infection, directly from the ordinary cold, or from secondary infection of accumulations of mucus in the various sinuses. Two sets of sinuses are most commonly affected; the frontal, lying directly behind the eyebrows, and the auxiliary, which are in the cheek bones. If the drainage channels become blocked from congested mucous membrane in the nose, enlarged turbinate bones, or the middle partition of the nose, the mucus is retained in the sinuses and may easily become infected from the nasal bacteria. At times, headaches and eye disturbances simulating true sinusitis may be due to pressure from the accumulated secretion.

"In the alternating hot and cold climate of the greater part of the United States, colds are prevalent, large numbers of individuals have faulty nasal structure; for example, high nasal floors, deviated septa, spurs, and enlarged turbinates, many of these due to injuries received during childhood and in sports. Either of these factors, or both, a cold and a faulty nose, account for most of the cases of sinusitis. Theoretically, sinusitis might be avoided if all colds were prevented, and all nasal passages free and unobstructed. Practically, that is obviously impossible, so that, in a certain percentage of individuals at least, some sinusitis occurs. Much may be done to prevent sinus complication after a cold has started."

"Acute sinusitis is appropriately treated by shrinking the nasal membranes to facilitate drainage; the use of suction apparatus for the same reason, and—often irrigation, where the antrum is involved. These same measures are usually advised in the exacerbations of the chronic type. The persistent use of bland oils in the nose after alkaline gargles is often helpful in alleviating the dropping mucus into the pharynx. Removal to dry, equable climates frequently results in practical cures as long as the patient remains there; the ailment may return if residence is resumed in the former locality. To prevent sinusitis—avoid colds."

COLDS THAT DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified croscote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery which has a twofold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, croscote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to croscote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the croscote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

RAIL PROBLEM
BIG ISSUE ON TRADE REVIVAL

Agreement on Pool of Revenues Expected During Conference

BY DAVID LAWRENCE
Copyright, 1931 by Post Pub. Co.
Washington—Consideration of the railroad problem remains uppermost in the minds of government officials as the biggest single step in the economic recovery of business.

Conferences between railroad executives and members of the Interstate Commerce commission will lead to an agreement on the details of the commission's plan for a pool of revenues derived from increased freight rates. The railroads through the committee are proposing that a railroad credit corporation, analogous to that formed by the banks recently, shall be set up and that deposits be made with it of freight revenues just as the banks are segregating 2 per cent of their deposits for general credit use.

In the case of the railroads, the new corporation will issue debentures which will be held by the railroads that contribute their freight revenues over and above existing rates. The money paid into the credit corporation will be loaned to the individual railroads that need it to help them pay interest charges. It may also be used to refund maturing obligations in the event that some railroads find it difficult to refinance securities that come due. The Interstate Commerce commission estimates that only about $70,000,000 will be needed in 1932 for refunding maturing obligations of American railroads.

Weak Roads
It is figured that the railroad credit corporation will take in from $100,000,000 to $125,000,000 in revenue from contributing railroads. Such a company could guarantee the payment of new issues of securities for weaker railroads and the new securities would thus absorb $70,000,000 of private capital instead of taking any considerable portion of the credit corporation's funds. In other words the credit corporation, by reason of its situation as a virtual guarantor of the interest payments of weaker railroads, becomes itself a financial institution of potential credit power.

While there has been some criticism of the commission's plan for pooling increased freight revenues on the ground that it compels the strong roads to support the weak, this has subsided somewhat as the rail executives have realized support is to be obtained later on for refunding maturing securities and for any consolidation program.

Meanwhile there are reports of progress in the informal negotiations now going on between railroad union officials and executives. It is recognized that under the machinery of the present law and steps to raise the wage scales might take a year or more to effect, especially if both sides exercised their full prerogatives of delay. So the hope now is that voluntary cooperation between labor and the railroad companies will make it possible to effect certain economies in working rules or even in wage scales. It is calculated that a 10 per cent decrease in wages would save the roads $200,000,000 and would enable them to plan their future with confidence. The step is being suggested as an emergency measure only and for one year's duration.

Possible Economies
It is of course not the only way the roads can save money, as the commission in its recent decision pointed to various economies that can be made. Railroad consolidation and pooling of services are expected to furnish big economies and while much of this can be done under existing law, the roads hesitate to disturb their financial structures or make any inter-company agreements until a larger question of consolidation has been decided.

When it is considered that the railroads purchase fully a billion and a half dollars of materials and equipment a year, some idea may be gained of the stimulus to business that would come from a stabilization of the whole railroad situation. The administration recognizes the urgent need for a settlement and between now and Dec. 1, when the plan proposed by the Interstate Commerce commission must be submitted for approval, official Washington will be busier with the railroad problem than any other factor in the general business crisis.

Who's News Today

BY LEMUEL F. PARTON
Copyright 1931, By Cons. Press
New York —(CPA)—Four years after the war, David Lloyd George split the liberal party by ousting L. D. George.

Since then, he has been slipping steadily. Does this conservative victory mean Elba for the little knock-kneed Napoleon with the Leonine in a name and the gift of tongues? Prophecies differ. He has performed miracles even greater than that of Almes McPherson in diving into the sea at Long Beach and emerging in Mexico.

Lloyd George is the most versatile talker in British history. "Down with the dukes!" he shouted to the cousin Jacks, at a time when the dukes were merely museum pieces and weren't bothering anybody. Then, in a flash, his erant genius would turn from demagoguery to sound statesmanship—taxation, agrarian reform, international affairs. The period of his rise to power was from 1906 to the war. He was, in fact, Britain's attorney at the peace conference. The world knows the story of his dominating and penetrating intelligence there.

Welding together his coalition ministry, he made himself all but dictator during the four years after the war. He played the chief role in the Irish settlement. Then, in the sporting phrase, Stanley Baldwin swung from the heel and Lloyd George began an eight-year fade-out.

He is now 68, recovering from a serious illness and a major operation. British politicians hesitate to count him out, for there is wizardry in the brilliant opportunism of the little Welshman.

"Dial 362. The baby has the croup." So it may be, with this new method of curing disease by radio, demonstrated before the American Academy of Medicine by Dr. Willys R. Whitney, director of research for the General Electric Co. since 1900. "Radiotherapy" is the name of the new machine—still in the experimental stage—about which Dr. Whitney has been hinting for several years.

If the successor to Thomas A. Edison should come from the ranks of the research scientists, it might well be Dr. Whitney. He has advanced a method to heat houses by radio, a "talking book"—the machine substituting for a reader—the "electric eye," and numerous other electrical wonders. He was one of the first explorers of talking pictures and television. After the sinking of the submarine S-4 at Provincetown in December, 1927, he headed the navy board for the development of a safe submarine. Scientific societies have overwhelmed him with honors.

From the Jamestown, N. Y., high school, he went to Boston Tech, gained a German Ph.D. taught five years at Tech and joined the General Electric. He is 63, broad, rugged, active, happy and accessible.

H. G. Wells, school teacher, said to the headmaster: "That son of yours is a mathematical prodigy. He will become a great mathematician." The boy became, instead, A. A. Milne, successor to Lewis Carroll as the author of children's books, poet, playwright, author of detective stories. He is now in New York to attend the opening of his latest play, "They don't Mean Any Harm."

"When We Were Very Young" brought him $125,000, with a sale of 1,000,000 copies, 500,000 of which were sold in the United States. "Win-the-Pooh" was also a winner. The books were written for his small son, Christopher Robin. "Mr. Pim Passes By," his first play, was a tremendous success.

The boy learned to read at two and obtained a scholarship for Westminster college at eleven—a record still unbroken. At Cambridge, he took all the honors in mathematics, but wrote some verses for punch which made him assistant editor when he finished college. The rest was easy. Tweeds, brogues, pipe, etc. piece out a character from one of his own stories. He positively won't lecture here, and goes berserk when anyone says he is whimsical.

CELLAR IS GOOD PLACE TO STAGE HALLOWEEN PARTY

Here Is Plan to Use in Decorating Basement for Event

BY JULIA BLANSHARD
New York—If you are giving a Halloween party this year, why not make it an underground affair? There is such a spooky-something about a party held in the cellar!

An attic is just as good. Or, if you live in an apartment and have neither, you can rig your entire home up with ghosts, owls, cats and goblins to give an eerie atmosphere the moment your guests enter the door.

Dim your electric lights with faces cut out of yellow paper. Have a scare-crow in a dark corner to leer at folks. Skeleton faces are not bad for the farthest corners and if you want to put a sheet around them to hang like grave-clothes, that makes the picture perfect.

Mystery's the Thing
To start things right, you must furnish an element of the unknown by giving all your guests masks the minute they arrive. Black cat and owl masks are appropriate for a Halloween party. Give your guests gay yellow caps, too, and aprons of decorative crepe paper certainly add a festive note.

It should be a "prowl party" from the word "GO!" Everybody should draw numbers from a witch's cauldron to find their partners. Once matched up, each pair finds the string matching their number and begins going upstairs, down stairs, around here and there to find their prize. Everybody will meet everybody else many times in this maze and the hilarity will start. The prizes, at the end of the strings should be clackers, weird whistles, anything that makes a noise like Halloween.

A Date for Halloween
No Halloween party is quite right that doesn't have contests and games. "Who has a date?" is a good starter. Have strings ready, about a yard long, with a nut-stuffed date tied in the center. A boy and a girl are given opposite ends of the string and start to see which one can "eat up" the string first and get the date. If either jerks the string from the other, he forfeits the date.

Try to get bites out of apples hung on strings, bobbing into the dishpan for apples and races to see who can peel apples without breaking the skin, throw the skin over their left shoulders and make an initial with it first, are all good stunts. Riding the broomstick is a pile of fun for children. You put a broomstick across the seats of two chairs, put a sofa pillow on the broomstick, and give the rider a cane. He is supposed to balance himself, lift the cane and flick off the tops of both chairs the handkerchiefs that you put there.

Fortune Teller
You should furnish your guests at least one way of having their fortunes told. A neighbor dressed up as a witch or gypsy is excellent if she is good at the trick. You can tell fortunes by cards, or you can ring up a fortune game that is like the old favorite "Pinning the tail on the pig." You have a big sheet of paper with all the various fortunes you can think of summed up. You blindfold a guest, spin him around to confuse him, give him a pointer and let the rest see which fortune he designates.

Every Halloween party should finish with a nice dance. It is most appropriate to have old-fashioned square dances danced, if you can get someone to call them. An accordion makes an ideal music for this. Halloween "Restaurant"

The room where refreshments are served, preferably the basement, should be hung with crepe paper moose, have a tree or two in the corner (made of pasteboard), plenty of spooky cats, owls and so on. And a big spacious table for refreshments. These can be little chicken pot pies, hot rolls, pickles and coffee or sandwiches, coffee, doughnuts and cider, or anything you want. But don't fall down on the decorative effect of your refreshments!

NEW CHARITY BODY ADVISED BY W. F. ASHE

Advancement Association Asks Appointment of Organization by Mayor

Kaukauna — Establishment of a new organization to conduct a community drive to raise funds for charity and relief work in the city next winter was advocated by William F. Ashe at the meeting of the Kaukauna Advancement Association in Hotel Kaukauna Wednesday evening. Mr. Ashe explained that two committees were appointed to direct relief work last winter, but that both of the organizations are unable to conduct the work this winter.

"While the condition of employment in the city at present is not depressing," Mr. Ashe said, "by about Jan. 1, most of the projects now underway will be completed, throwing a large number of men out of work. Because of the amount of relief money to be raised, the difficulties to be experienced in handling the drive and the spending of the money for relief, it is not the work of any one civic organization but the problem of the entire city, and a committee should be appointed by the mayor to act in this work."

He told of the work of the two relief organizations last year and said that the amount needed this winter would be about $1 per person in Kaukauna, or approximately $9,000. Several methods of collecting the amount were discussed, and the association finally asked the mayor to appoint a committee to do this work.

"Every man who now has a job should contribute to help the fellow without one," Mr. Ashe said.

The association approved printing a request that all business men in Kaukauna close their stores during the afternoon of Armistice Day to permit everyone to attend the charity football tilt between Kaukauna and Appleton high schools. The suggestion was made by Dale Andrews, president of the Kaukauna American Legion, who aided in arrangements for the game.

Although he was speaking without authority, Mr. Andrews told the group that he was certain that the Kaukauna American Legion post would willingly turn the share of the proceeds of the football game into the community chest to be handled by the mayor's committee. Peter Kinn, head of the Kaukauna employment bureau, submitted a favorable report on the condition of employment in the city at present, but also stated that most of the projects would be completed by the first of the year. He also reported that the basket factory which he had been operating in capacity of receivers, had ceased operations due to slack business. A suggestion of completing work on the high school athletic field was made by James F. Cavanaugh. Mr. Cavanaugh also stated that the high school auditorium was in need of repairs.

CULBERTSON on CONTRACT

by Ely Culbertson

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

GIVE ADVERSARIES CREDIT FOR AN ASSIST

The recriminations at the Contract table vividly prove that average defensive play leaves something to be desired. However, sometimes the defending partners should not blame each other too greatly for failing to find the road to safe defense through the maze with which they are confronted. A strong player always capitalizes the mistakes of his opponents and sometimes these mistakes do not need to be very glaring ones to permit accurate play and correct planning of the hand to reap a reward not apparent on the face of the cards.

The hand below was played by Mrs. William E. Zontlein of New York, former co-holder with Mrs. H. L. Peterson of the Women's United States Contract Pair Championship of the United States.

North and South vulnerable, East and West not vulnerable.

South—Dealer.

1—East's trump support of his partner's overall bid is not quite adequate. However, his hand contains 2 honor-tricks and support for the spades if West is strong enough to rebid.

2—West rebids because of additional strength in the trump suit. The scoring situation is also a possible factor in the bid. The hand may prove difficult to manage, however, due to the length in diamonds already bid by South.

3—West's four spade bid is made without much hope of fulfilling the contract, but with fair assurance that any loss on the hand will be offset by the honor holding, as partner has made a bid and supported the spades also.

In the play, North opened the diamond King which held the trick. He could then defeat the contract by shifting to trumps or clubs, but

HIGH SCHOOL CLUB TO ISSUE POETRY BOOKS

The Masque and Book club of Appleton high school is making plans to issue a book of poetry every month to include original poems of student members and favorite poems. This will be a part of their literary program for the year, which also includes a short story contest among its members that closes Dec. 1.

Committees in charge of both projects have been chosen by the group with Clark Carnes heading the poetry magazine committee and Miss Ruth Frampton in charge of the short story contest. Others assisting with the magazine are Harold Bronold, William Chopin, James Neller. Students on the short story committee include Hubert Boldt.

NEW FEED BUYER'S GUIDE AIDS FARMERS

Chart Tells How to Make Dollar Go Farthest When Buying Feed

Because the prices of mill feeds and hays are not always in line with their actual feeding values, many farmers are at a loss, these days, to know what feeds to buy so that the money spent may go the farthest, according to Gus Sell, county agent.

There is now, however, a quite accurate way of comparing feeds and their prices so that at a glance one can tell, on any given market, which is most economical to buy, states County Agent Sell. This is called the "Feed Buyers Guide" and has just been devised by Gus Bohstedt, of the Wisconsin college of agriculture to help make the feed dollar buy the most possible.

This guide, which can now be obtained at the county agent's office, includes 43 of the common livestock feeds covering the mill feeds, hays, silage, and dried milks feeds. On it the feeding values of all the 43 feeds are compared by numbers so simply arranged that by merely filling in the market prices of the several feeds one sees at a glance which feed is the most economical to buy at those prices and just how much so.

"Because the drouth struck large portions of Wisconsin, many dairy-men are asking for information on what to feed and how to feed their dairy cows when the hay crop is short, when they have less silage than in other years, and when they have to buy additional grains and protein concentrates," states Bohstedt. "The idea behind this feed guide is therefore to give as much help as possible to our Wisconsin farmers who are obliged to manage closely under present drouth conditions and who want their dollars spent for feed to go just as far as possible."

Venice must have been "roiled" by the news that her mother-in-law, the famous actress, had been killed by the infamous Dr. Drake Farrelly seems to enjoy talking to her, she gains unusual confidence and is warmly expressed. Venice has originality, but expression is blocked by her lack of confidence. She has grown accustomed to being a wall-flower, but her unpopularity makes her dissatisfied, because her mother is not satisfied with her desire to establish herself as a success. Her mother studies with special interest the magnetism of Ann Duryea, who the focus of interest at Lola

Drake Farrelly's party. Lola tells her that man has an attraction because she suspected of murdering her husband. Lola says she has a crush on him and sits on the stairs, and presumes Drake Farrelly sits down beside her. They grow friendly, and Lola tells him that she is shy socially. Why do you bother with "shy"?

"WHAT else is there?" Venice said. "Mother's always showing me how you can never amount to anything without sweat and tears."

Sitting opposite her mother at dinner, smooth candles shining on silver that had only escaped Sherman's march through Georgia by being hidden in a cellar, Venice suddenly hated the decorum, and background to which she belonged. "I have such a headache," said

EXPLANATION TO BE ASKED OF NEW PACT

French People Want to Know More About Franco-German Commission

BY M. K. WHITELEATHER

Paris —(AP)—The people of France, always skeptical, are in a "show me" attitude toward the new Franco-German economic commission created when Premier Pierre Laval visited Berlin.

Will this permanent commission, based on an idea new in the somewhat embittered relations between the two peoples, do what political efforts at common action have failed to do in the past?

The average Frenchman is asking himself just that question.

And his representative in the chamber of deputies will ask M. Laval the same thing when parliament reconvenes in mid-November.

The new part of the scheme is that it would bring French and German businessmen into everyday contact. This hope is that out of this commercial intimacy there will evolve a more friendly political atmosphere.

Brand Pushed Aside

The commission, which represents governmental departments and business and industrial interests in both countries, will foster cartels and trade relations between the two banks of the Rhine.

Hitherto, and periodically, both French and German ministers have tried to bring about some sort of collaboration. Always something has balked them.

When Aristide Briand's conciliatory tactics broke down with the death of the German statesman, Gustav Stresemann, the younger politicians of France began to cast about for methods to replace those of the "grand old man of peace."

A new ruling crowd, comparatively young and fact-facing came into power with the accession of Andre Tardieu, Pierre Laval, Andre Francois-Poncet, Pierre Etienne Flandin, Paul Reynaud and others.

Briand stooped and his mustache drooping more than ever, was pushed into the window as a showpiece.

Get Left Wing Support

These young men are more tenacious than was Briand; their conception of how to conserve peace differs from his. They are shrewd negotiators, and they take advantage of the French peasant's desire to hold tight to what is his.

They thus win support from left wing conservatives and from a large group which used to vote for Briand's schemes, but with their tongues in their cheeks.

To the polished Francois-Poncet, now ambassador to Berlin, is credited the major conception of the business scheme of approach to Germany.

M. Francois-Poncet said to himself that if efforts to bring peace by political cooperation had failed, then perhaps the businessmen could do something.

No one here, except the "extreme right" who believe that a disposition to war is an essential part of German character, denies the possibility of some good at least coming from the plan.

Your Birthday

WHAT TOMORROW MEANS TO YOU
"SCORPIO"

If October 30th is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11 a. m. to 1:30 p. m., and from 3:10 p. m. to 7 p. m. The danger hours are from 8:10 a. m. to 10 a. m., from 2 p. m. to 3 p. m., and from 8 p. m. to 10 p. m.

October 30th, according to the Stars, will be irritating and a restless day, characterized by nervousness and "I-don't-know-what's-the-matter" feeling. Only routine work should be attempted. The younger people will sense more keenly the unsettled influences than the middle-aged or old. The former will chafe at fluctuating conditions, unsuitable family surroundings, and will lack any definiteness of purpose.

Children born on this October 30th will be hasty and bad-tempered. They will not have violent tempers, but they will be sulky and moody, when things do not go their way. They will be industrious by fits and starts, and their lives will reveal no continuity of purpose. They will be "rainbow chasers."

You, if born on October 30th, are

Minister Tried for Son's Murder

Accused of having slain his son to collect the youth's insurance, the Rev. James M. Williams (right), pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Rochelle, Ga., was brought to trial at Augusta, Ga. The body of the son, Rafoed Williams (left), a pharmacist's mate in the U. S. Navy, was found slain by gunfire on a roadside. A blood-stained shirt which the minister is alleged to have sent to a laundry led to his arrest.

—A very excusable pride—to what had been done.

Your interest, too, in human affairs is great. You, however, often permit your judgment to be warped by unjustifiable sympathy for the "under-dog." You are always ready to champion the case—though it may be a forlorn one—of those who you think are oppressed or treated with a scant show of justice.

Your natural power and endurance are no mean factors, and you at times show too much eagerness to draw on your reserves. These should be built up, not depleted. You always have yourself in hand and are excellent in a sudden emergency.

Your horoscope denotes a life of intensiveness, with one or two serious physical collapses. You are destined to accomplish much, but more would be possible if you could school yourself to spread your activities over a longer period of time.
